H.R. 3609: Mrs. LLOYD.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 4055

By Mr. MCKINNEY:

—Page 4, strike out lines 10 through 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(A)(i) in the case of individuals who need to be placed in inpatient mental health facilities, to place such individuals in optimum therapeutic settings and to provide mental health treatment and related support services appropriate to such individuals' level of functioning,

"(ii) in the case of residents of public inpatient mental health facilities who have been inappropriately placed in such facilities, to discharge such residents, and, to the extent appropriate, to place them in optimum therapeutic settings and to provide mental health treatment and related support services appropriate to such individuals' level of functioning,

"(iii) in the case of individuals who are discharged from, or are in need of placement in, inpatient mental health facilities, to inform them of available community-based facilities and programs providing mental health treatment and related support services and to provide them access to a sufficient number of adequately staffed and adequately funded community-based facilities and programs providing mental health and related support services, and

"(iv) to otherwise establish or carry out an appropriate individual program plan or treatment or discharge plan for a mentally ill individual,".

"For purposes of clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A), the term "optimum therapeutic setting" means the environment that is least restrictive of an individual's personal liberty and where the care, treatment, habilitation, or rehabilitation is particularly suited to the level of services necessary to properly implement an individual's treatment, habilitation, and rehabilitation. The optimum therapeutic setting for an individual may be a licensed and properly operated State hospital or other public residential care facility."

SENATE—Wednesday, January 29, 1986

The Senate met at 11 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Our prayer this morning will be delivered by the Most Reverend Edmond Lee Browning, presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church. He is sponsored by Senator MATSUNAGA.

PRAYER

The Most Reverend Edmond Lee Browning of Honolulu, HI, presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church, offered the following prayer:

I ask that this morning we remember in prayer the seven who lost their lives so tragically yesterday, and may we remember their families and friends and the communities from which they came.

O God, Whose days are without end and Whose mercies cannot be numbered, we give You our humble thanks for the life and witness of Christa McAuliffe, Francis Scobee, Michael Smith, Judith Resnik, Ronald McNair, Ellison Onizuka, and Gregory Jarvis. We pray that the gift of their lives might be honored by this Nation with a deeper sense of dedication to the pursuit of truth and peace. For their families and friends—for all who are bereaved—grant the spirit of faith and courage, that they and we may have strength to meet the days ahead with steadfastness and patience; not sorrowing as those without hope but in thankful remembrance of Your promise of life always.

And now unto God's gracious mercy and protection we commit those we have remembered and ourselves this day. May the Lord bless us and keep us, may the Lord make His face to shine upon us and be gracious unto us, may the Lord lift up the light of His countenance and give His peace to us, to this Nation, and to all the world, this day and evermore. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Hawaii, Senator MATSUNAGA.

BISHOP BROWNING'S PRAYER

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, Bishop Browning's prayer expresses for all of us the agony of the human spirit while pointing us toward an appreciation of the eternal glories of creation which can bridge for us the chasms of despair.

It is appropriate that our man of God this morning is the presiding bishop of the Episcopal Church of the United States, who has just come to Washington from Honolulu and his home diocese of Hawaii. There the loss of the Challenger space shuttle is not only the enormous shock that it is nationwide, but also by virtue of Lt. Col. Ellison Onizuka, a death in our community family of a hometown hero who was one to be emulated and now venerated.

As my own bishop, since I claim to be an Episcopalian, Bishop Browning has offered prayful words which have provided consolation for me this morning, Mr. President, and solace for this entire body and a grieving Nation and world.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague from Hawaii for his remarks.

I am very pleased to have Bishop Browning here with us this morning.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, under the standing order, the leaders have 10 minutes each, followed by a special order for the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, Senator PROXMIRE, and then we have routine morning business until noon, with a 5-minute limit per Senator, and at noon we go back on Conrail, S. 638.

Today we will be having votes. I would hope we would have a number of votes to try to get somewhere near the end of this rather important matter.

We are now in the second week, and there are a number of other issues that we would like to bring before the Senate.

I know the distinguished manager, the Senator from Missouri, Senator DANFORTH, shares that view.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, if the leader will yield, he is quite correct. I think that this week, maybe next week, marks the 1-year anniversary from when we received the proposed sale of Conrail from the Secretary of Transportation.

We have had numerous hearings in the Commerce Committee and the Judiciary Committee.

This matter has now been on the floor of the Senate for a week. I believe we had one vote and that was a cloture vote on the motion to proceed, and that is as far as we have gotten.

I do hope we can make some progress today. It is going to be a watershed day because the initial vote will in fact determine whether or not we are going to have a Conrail bill.

I think that the leader made it clear yesterday to the Republican Senators, and I wonder if he will state his views today. If the motion to waive the Budget Act does not prevail and if instead the point of order is agreed to by the Chair, what would be the effect, as the leader sees it, on the future of a Conrail bill?

Mr. DOLE. As I see it now and as I indicated yesterday in our policy luncheon, it will probably mean the end of consideration of the bill for some time.

There has been almost endless delay in consideration of this matter anyway. If we cannot sell an asset, we might as well give up on us reducing spending around this place, and many have already.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. DOLE. No.

I would suggest that those who have amendments should offer their amendments. We should vote on them. We should get on with the business.

We are well into the session. I would just hope that we could complete action on Conrail.

I did not want to get into discussion of Conrail right now. I would be happy to have Members who want to discuss it do so.

125TH ANNIVERSARY OF KANSAS STATEHOOD

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I wish to insert in the RECORD at this point and note the fact that today is the birthday of the State of Kansas, 125 years ago.

Mr. President, it was a century and a quarter ago that this Congress passed legislation—signed into law by President James Buchanan—which permitted Kansas to join our Union as a State.

Today we observe what is known as Kansas Day—the 125th anniversary of the Sunflower State as a partner in these United States.

The celebration today may be muted as we reflect on the Nation's tragedy of yesterday. Yet while we quietly ponder what the future holds, we gain strength from the motto of Kansas itself: "Ad astra per aspera," "To the stars through difficulties."

Although we lost no Kansans in yesterday's tragic accident, obviously the people of Kansas share in the Nation's grief because we do have native sons who have raced to the stars as participants in our country's Space Program.

Apollo Comdr. Ron Evans was born in St. Francis, KS. Shuttle Comdr. Joe Engle came from Chapman, KS. And another shuttle astronaut, Steve Hawley, comes from Salina, KS.

Even before these brave men soared through space, another Kansan—a woman—long ago served as a pioneer in flight. And, like the courageous educator who left us yesterday, she too never returned. Amelia Earhart of Atchison helped pave the way to the stars.

But these are not the only men and women of Kansas who have contributed greatly to our country. The list is long, and on this 125th anniversary of Kansas' birthday, we remember William Allen White, Charles Curtis, Dwight Eisenhower, and Jim Ryun. We remember, too, the scores of lesser known sons and daughters who in their own time and their own way also reached to the stars.

And in their wake, through difficulties—indeed, through great sacrifice and at times with tragic personal consequences—Kansans have made our State, our Nation, and our world a better place. Out of the soil of Kansas, from its vast prairies and out of the stars, have come a unique people destined to lead the way.

The region that is now Kansas had for thousands of years been inhabited by native Indians before the first white settler appeared. Some 80 years before the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock, Spanish Conquistador Vasquez de Coronado explored for gold in Kansas.

French military and trading posts were established in Kansas by the early 18th century, and within another century the Santa Fe and Oregon Trails crossed through Kansas to open up the western wilderness to a young country.

The Pony Express began in Kansas. No other State sent a higher percentage of its young men to help save the Union during our Civil War. The first American Indian to serve as Vice President, Charles Curtis, came from Kansas. The Sunflower State serves as the breadbasket for the world.

Yes, we have our challenges today. But on this 125th anniversary of Kansas Day, I share the confidence of the people of Kansas who know these challenges can be met. Our motto, "Ad astra per aspera," serves as our rallying cry, for we will get to the stars, even through difficulty.

Mr. President, while we look forward in our State to celebrating additional birthdays, I wish to share the confidence of the people of Kansas along with the rest of the American people who know we can meet the challenges ahead and, as I have suggested, their motto in itself is not only symbolic but it is a challenge for all of us to do the very best we can in whatever we may do.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

(Mr. KASTEN assumed the chair.)

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, will the majority leader accommodate this Senator to answer one question?

Mr. DOLE. Yes.

Mr. DIXON. May I say to the majority leader, I believe he knows I have not been supportive of the idea of a filibuster against Conrail. I recognize a cloture motion has been filed. My staff indicates to me that there could be problems with respect to germaneness of my antitrust amendment, which is an important amendment, should we not have sufficient time before we get to the cloture vote.

Now, as the majority leader knows, there are about four major amendments. I am perfectly willing to go to these things and I am willing to have time limits on these things, may I say to the majority leader. We can have votes and if we are beat, we are beat. I have no problem with that.

But can the majority leader give us some assurance, or can he, through the chairman of the committee, the distinguished Senator from Missouri, give us some assurance that germaneness questions will not be raised? I can file other amendments, but I would like to not have to resort to that because the correct amendment is the amendment I am prepared to file.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I believe, if other Senators are willing to do the same as the Senator from Illinois has always been willing to do, we will not have that problem and we will dispose of the amendments. But if others wish to delay the bill, obviously that presents another problem.

But if there is a good faith effort to accomplish this and deal with the four amendments, I certainly think we can work out something to satisfy the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DIXON. I am prepared to submit mine and have a time limit on it and dispose of it at any time today, may I say to the majority leader. But I would appreciate his courtesy and that of the chairman very much to not get me into a problem about germaneness later. The issue is well known. It has been discussed at length.

Mr. DOLE. I am not managing the bill, so I am not certain if anyone has requested to be recognized to offer the next amendment, but the Senator from Illinois might discuss that with the Senator from Missouri. After we dispose of the motion, depending on what happens to that vote, then the bill is open for amendment. I do not believe anyone has been promised that their amendment would be brought up. At that time, maybe the Senator from Illinois can bring up his amendment.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader is recognized.

IN MEMORY OF SEVEN HEROES

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, nearly four centuries ago, John Donne wrote:

> No man is an island, entire of itself; every man is a piece of the continent, a part of the main; . . . any man's death diminishes me, because I am involved in mankind; and therefore never send to ask for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee.

Yesterday, millions of Americans, as they have so often in recent decades, felt the universal truth of those words. Together, we have relinquished a mutual national pride in the bounding successes of our space program. So great had our confidence grown in our extraterrestrial exploits that few of us were prepared for yesterday's tragedy.

But as untold millions of us witnessed the death of seven of our exceptionally gifted and courageous fellow-Americans, we were reminded of the dangers inherent in this great effort. And more important, perhaps, we felt again our common, treasured American-ness. Most of us did not know Francis Scobee, Michael Smith, Ronald McNair, Judy Resnik, Gregory Jarvis, Ellison Onizuka, or Christa McAuliffe personally, but around the country the pain of their deaths was akin to that experienced by many at the passing of a family member or a friend. And as the hours wore on and more information was shared with us about their individual achievements and accomplishments, our sense of loss—the frustration coming from the destruction of so much talent and brilliance—that sense of loss waxed larger. All of us, as individuals and as Americans, felt diminished by yesterday's tragedy.

Part of America's destiny, however, is to be a cutting edge of mankind's larger destiny. Throughout our history, being an American has often demanded some kind of risk. In generations past, numberless men and women, who took their lives into their own hands to cross the oceans to come to America, never made it. Most of those men and women realized the hazards involved in leaving the relative certainties of the Old World to come to the uncertainties of this land. But the possibilities of the American endeavor promised too great rewards to keep them on safer shores. That was the courage that built this Nation.

We saw that courage again 24 hours ago. The seven whom we lost yesterday were aware of the hazards of contemporary space exploration, even if others were not. Nevertheless, they were willing to lay their lives on the line to push back the borders of the unknown. Those seven, perhaps, realized, as did many of our forebearers, that being an American is to live ever on new thresholds, that a pioneering people will always search for untried frontiers.

Their witness cannot be lost. Through a glass darkly, prophets tell us that space is our next destiny. And if Providence is with us, Americans will be in the vanguard of those who reach out into the universe, of those who plant human footprints on the dust of distant planets. But wherever we go, the memory of those seven heroes—those seven giants—whom we lost yesterday will go with us.

THE PILGRIM

Man comes a pilgrim of the universe,
Out of the mystery that was before
The world, out of the wonder of old stars.
Far roads have felt his feet, forgotten wells
Have glassed his beauty bending down to drink.
At altar-fires anterior to Earth
His soul was lighted, and it will burn on
After the suns have wasted on the void.
His feet have felt the pressure of old worlds,
And are to tread on others yet unnamed—
Worlds sleeping yet in some new Dream of God,

CRITICAL MINERALS DEPENDENCE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in May of last year, I offered a successful amendment to the Defense Department authorization requiring that the Defense Department report to the Congress on the impact of the loss of ferroalloy production capacity on the Nation's industrial base. Since 1978, we have seen ferroalloy production capacity decline by more than 50 percent. Late last year, another plant—the Foote Mineral Company operation in West Virginia—closed as a result of imports from abroad.

Why is this loss of capacity important? The ferroalloy problem is not a West Virginia jobs issue alone. These vital alloys are used in hundreds of special metals applications, from jet engines to computer chips.

In the January 22, 1986, issue of the Christian Science Monitor, a report on our mineral dependence on South Africa reminds us that we have become vulnerable because of imports of several of these crucial metals.

How can we reduce this dangerous dependence and assure adequate domestic supplies in the event of an emergency or supply disruption? A recent Office of Technology Assessment report points to the answer by noting that "a strategy for diversification of supply should consider whether the processing of these ferroalloys is also to be diversified or whether domestic processing of the ores into their allow form is to be encouraged." We learned during the oil crisis of the early 1970's that raw materials can be stockpiled, and can be bought even in times of supply disruption. But, if we do not have the capacity to process raw materials—whether crude oil or ores—then we put our domestic production base at risk.

So we lean upon South Africa for this vital element in our national defense. Of course, we could go to the next major supplier, the Soviet Union—maybe—we could, depending upon where the problem is, what the problem is, and with what country we have the problem. So if the United States were to be in a conventional war at some point throughout the world against Soviet forces or against Soviet-supported forces, then could we depend upon the Soviet Union to supply us with these vital materials?

The European community and Japan have comprehensive programs to assure the survival of their ferroalloy production capacity. But the United States remains vulnerable because of its failure to guarantee an adequate ferroalloy production base.

I ask unanimous consent that the article from the Christian Science Monitor of January 22, 1986, entitled "United States Sizing Up Alternatives To Skirt South Africa for Critical Metals" be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Christian Science Monitor, Jan. 22, 1986]

UNITED STATES SIZING UP ALTERNATIVES TO SKIRT SOUTH AFRICA FOR CRITICAL METALS

(By Andrew Collier)

South Africa supplies the United States with four metals used in everthing from soap dishes and car bumpers to the turbine blades in jet engines.

Without these metals, the soap dish would rust, the bumper would lose its shine, and the turbine blade would crack.

Although an embargo or slowdown in the flow of these metals does not seem imminent, political unrest in South Africa is causing manufacturers and government leaders to examine United States reliance on that country for chrome, platinum, managenese, and cobalt (the latter of which is transported through South Africa from Zaire and Zambia).

South Africa, the Soviet Union, and Zaire account for more than half the world production of chrome, cobalt, managanese, and the platinum group metals, according to the congressional Office of Technology Assessment (OTA). The Soviet Union is obviously not a prime alternative supplier to the United States, since the metals are often used in defense-related goods.

HOW TO PREPARE FOR A SHUTOFF

In 1984, South Africa produced 47 percent of the nonsocialist world's chrome, 40 percent of its manganese, and about 80 percent of its supply of platinum. Zaire and Zambia in 1982 produced 58 percent of the world's cobalt.

Both chrome and cobalt increase the strength and hardness of steels used at high heat—important in jet engines. Chrome reduces oxidation and provides a shiny finish to steel. Stainless steel is partly made of ferrochromium, an alloy.

About 90 percent of the manganese used in the United States goes into steel as an alloying agent to prevent the buildup of iron sulfides, which affect steel's strength and brittleness. This is equally true of garden-variety steels in ordinary objects and of high-strength, low-alloy steels used in cars and other products.

The platinum group metals, which include platinum, palladium, rhodium, iridium, osmium, and ruthenium, are essential to catalytic converters that reduce exhaust emissions in cars. They also assist in the catalytic functions in oil refining and are found in switching systems for telecommunications.

There are two alternatives in preparing for a shutoff of these metals: Stockpile enough to tide the country over what most believe would be only a one- or two-month suspension; or develop new materials and recycling capabilities now that could be adopted quickly.

These alternatives depend, in turn, upon how easily each metal can be substituted and how ready the economy is to accept vast changes in its consumption habits.

Analysts agree chrome would be the hardest to eliminate from the U.S. materials diet. According to a Shearson Lehman Brothers publication: "The world industrial economy would be hard pushed to operate at normal levels without stainless steels. There are alternative alloy steels, but they tend not to have the same qualities as stainless steels in such areas as corrosion resistance."

Arden L. Bement, vice-president of technical resources at TRW Inc., a defense contractor, notes that "in some critical applications it's very difficult to find substitutes to do what chrome does without trading off performance."

Iron-aluminum alloys, though more brittle than chrome alloys, work well in low- to medium-temperature applications, he says. Overall, however, this alloy lacks the strength and resistance to fatigue that chrome alloy has. Chrome combines corrosion resistance with mechanical advantages.

Manganese is added to most steels. It provides toughness and prevents the buildup of sulfur and phosphorus. Mr. Bement suggests that the move to cleaner steel by using a high degree of refinement and accuracy in the melting process could go a long way toward reducing the need for manganese. The OTA predicts that these processing improvements could lessen manganese demand by 45 percent by the year 2000.

Platinum group metals are widely available as scrap in automobile catalytic converters and from electronic parts. The expense of collecting and separating the scrap from other materials keeps it from becoming an easy substitute for imported pure platinum. But an increasing amount of it is being recycled.

The United States also has significant deposits of these metals in Montana which could supply between 2 and 3 percent of world production, according to the OTA.

A variety of new alloys have sprung up as a substitute for cobalt since unrest in Zaire in 1978 caused a brief but alarming jump in its price. But each new alloy requires years of testing and certification by the Defense Department when it is used in armaments.

The OTA study said the U.S. can increase the government's stockpile of these strategic metals or reduce dependency through conservation, new production, or substitution.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business until 12 noon with statements limited to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SPACE SHUTTLE "CHALLENGER"

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, our Nation has now had 1 day to reflect on the tragedy of the space shuttle Challenger. We have seen the films of this nightmare, and the anguished faces of the families, friends, and colleagues, of these brave Americans.

As I have contemplated yesterday's events, it is my opinion that the death of Christa McAuliffe makes this tragedy even more personal and painful to us all.

If I were to compile a list of the most unforgettable, character-building individuals in my life, I know that such a list would contain the names of several of my teachers. I do not believe that my devotion to these teachers is unique. On the contrary, I believe that the strength of feeling Americans have for teachers is common. Accordingly, when we saw Christa McAuliffe enthusiastically tell the Nation to watch her teach class in space, we saw more than just Christa McAuliffe. We also remembered that same enthusiasm in our favorite grade schoolteacher.

Thousands applied to become the first teacher in space. Christa McAuliffe was chosen from 10 finalists. When she was selected she told the other finalists: "When that shuttle goes, there might be one body, but there's going to be 10 souls that I'm taking with me." It is very characteristic of the first teacher selected to travel in space to be so unselfish, and to make her peers, who were not selected, feel as if they would always be a part of her journey. The teachers I remember also displayed this strength of character.

It seems to me that it takes a special type of person to be a teacher. They are not people who are interested in self-aggrandizement. Wealth is not their goal. They are energetic role-models for our youth. Their desire is to serve, and to spread the enthusiasm for learning to their students.

With all the pain our Nation has suffered in the last day, it is easy for other feelings, like pride, to be suppressed. As we pray for those closest to the crew members of the Challenger, and in the midst of the pain we all feel regarding this tragedy—let us also take this opportunity to express our pride. We are proud of the bravery and the outstanding character exhibited by each member of the crew during the course of their lives. We are proud of the entire Space Program. We are proud of our astronauts, and in this time of reflection—we are very proud of the American teacher.

ELIE WIESEL, THE HOLOCAUST, AND THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, Elie Wiesel, Chairman of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, returned to Germany last week, almost 41 years since his release from the Buchenwald concentration camp. The purpose of his visit was to continue his effort to keep alive the memory of Nazi horror.

The story of the Holocaust remains difficult to tell. Yet, as Mr. Wiesel has eloquently stated in his novels and speeches, it is a history of suffering that must be told. How can the victims describe the horror of being selected for extermination, the nightmare of the unending hunger, or the despair of being torn forever from loved ones?

The abandoned concentration camps of Europe stand as mute reminders of these crimes against humanity. Some, such as the camp at Auschwitz, have been developed into museums, so that visitors will not fail to see the crematorium or the mass graves. But do the cleaned and manicured grounds, or the shrines erected in memory of the dead tell the whole story? The words and actions of spokesmen such as Mr. Wiesel bring dignity that was never accorded to the innocent victims, but can his words ensure that these crimes will never again be repeated? For is not the purpose of the recollection and study of the Holocaust but to prevent the repetition of such horrible crimes?

Mr. President, should we simply applaud Mr. Wiesel's efforts? No, Mr. President, we must take action to confirm the gains made on behalf of the persecuted. The Genocide Convention is not merely a symbolic eulogy of the Holocaust. This treaty offers a step that America can take to prevent the repetition of the ghastly Nazi war crimes. Is genocide simply a lamentable fact of our past? How can we sympathize with Mr. Wiesel's cause without taking action? The Genocide Convention establishes the mechanisms for action whenever the world is threatened again by such crimes. Never again should we stand by and allow the suffering expressed by the victims of the Holocaust to be experienced.

STAR WARS SPENDING UNFAIR TO MOST STATES

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, for the past 2 years, those of us who are opposed to star wars have attacked it for many reasons including the following:

First. It will threaten and perhaps destroy the credibility of the superpower deterrents that have kept the nuclear peace during the 40 years of the nuclear age.

Second. It will not work. A preponderance of independent scientific competence contends that whatever technological progress SDI or star wars makes will be matched and overcome by a corresponding technological progress for offensive nuclear missiles capable of penetrating the defense.

Third. It will set off a furious arms race between offensive and defensive nuclear weapons that will steadily increase the fear, the danger, and the likelihood of a fatal accident that could trigger the disaster of a full-fledged nuclear exchange.

Fourth. It will cost between half a trillion and a trillion dollars, to begin with. And that is truly only a beginning. It will provoke an endless spiral of defensive and offensive counterexpenditures that will drive Federal spending out of sight.

Fifth. It will bury any prospect of arms control. That will obviously start with the destruction of the Anti-Ballistic Missile [ABM] Treaty. Star wars will be a direct and complete repudiation of that ABM Treaty. But that will not be all. Star wars will also finish off the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty [SALT II]. That treaty expired January 1, 1986. It cannot be effectively renewed as long as the SDI proceeds because the Soviets could not and would not agree to limit their offensive missiles as SALT II requires, if such a limitation would make star wars a potential success.

Somehow, all of this is known by the Congress and the informed American public, but star wars plows on anyway, with multibillion-dollar appropriation after appropriation.

Maybe, Mr. President, another element in star wars will shake Members of the Congress awake. Within a few years this will be the most expensive project in human history, at any time anywhere. This happens to be precisely the time when Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is forcing the Congress to reduce every project in sight, including drastic reductions in the military itself.

Since star wars will certainly provoke a sharply stepped up race between offensive and defensive arsenals, it will, as time goes on, impose an immense burden on the taxpayers of every State and where will that money be spent? A few States will enjoy a massive increase in personal income and jobs that will greatly exceed the amount they pay to the Federal Government to bankroll SDI. But for the great majority of States star wars will be a huge economic loser. A review of star wars contracts in 1983 and 1984 showed that just four States—California, Washington, Texas, and Alabama—received literally 90 percent of all star wars funding. That is right, Mr. President, four States received 90 percent of the star wars dollars. Forty-six States were very big net losers. This is sure to continue to be the case as time goes. Why? Here is why: The Reagan administration has now adopted a policy to farm out increasing billions of star wars research dollars—all of which are paid by American taxpayers—to foreign countries. The United Kingdom recently signed an agreement with this country. The agreement was kept secret. But the reported demand of the United Kingdom was for a $1.5 billion share of all star wars funding over the next 5 years. The administration can be expected to show the same generosity to West Germany, Japan, France, Italy, and others. The expenditures come exclusively and entirely from American taxpayers. There has been no indication of any funding contributions from the United Kingdom or any other foreign country.

So, Mr. President, the residents of my State and most of the other States will be left providing billions of dollars over the years for this program with far less coming back than what will be going out. If this were a program that had the wholehearted support of the scientific community as an efficient way of protecting our country, Wisconsin citizens could be expected to pay their Federal taxes to support the program even though none of the funding of the program came to the State. But with a program that virtually every informed and independent scientific expert says cannot work, there is no way this Senator can do anything but oppose this folly with all my heart. Wisconsin taxpayers will pay out billions of dollars over the years. Wisconsin industry will surely suffer because of this drain of our capital. Our State will receive nothing in the way of job opportunities because of this payment in the next few years and far less than it pays out over the many years of the program. Mr. President, I can just see a Wisconsin U.S. Senator in 1990 and 1995 and in the year 2000 trying to answer to his constituents for the gaping discrepancy between the taxes paid to the Federal Government and the jobs and personal income returned to the State. I can tell you it is tough, very tough, to explain that right now. Star wars will make this much worse.

Think of the injustice. The Minister of Defense in the United Kingdom has signed an agreement with the United States for the United Kingdom to receive billions of dollars of the star wars work that will be financed by the taxpayers of Wisconsin and the rest of the United States. The only cold comfort for the United States is that it has so much company among other States. Except for the four States that will secure 90 percent of the star wars money, other States will be strictly losers.

And that is not all. The top 10 contractors—I am not talking about States now, I'm talking about defense contractors on this program. These few big defense contractors received 87 percent in dollar value of the awards through January 1985. What does that leave for small- and medium-size business? And that concentration spells real trouble for the great majority of American businesses that will pay taxes to support this program. SDI will control 20 percent of all venture capital from all sources, public and private, in the next 4 years. This program also means far less of Government funding of research and development will go for health and for improvements in technologies that will advance the general efficiency of American industry. In 1980 the military took 50 percent of all Government funding of research and development. In 1986 it will take 73 percent. If this program continues by the middle of the 1990's, the military will take 90 percent.

THE MYTH OF THE DAY: MEDICARE COVERS 100 DAYS OF SKILLED NURSING HOME CARE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the myth of the day is that Medicare actually provides 100 days of skilled nursing home care to beneficiaries.

If you look at any catalog of Medicare benefits, you will see that Medicare beneficiaries are entitled to 100 days of care in a skilled nursing facility [SNF] following discharge from a hospital if it is warranted by their medical condition. The first 20 days are free of charge to the beneficiary, and for each day beyond the 20th day the beneficiary must meet a daily copayment set by law at one-eighth of the Medicare hospital deductible.

What is not readily apparent in reading that explanation is that the nursing home copayment for the first time this year will begin to exceed the actual cost of a day of care in a nursing home to the Medicare Program. And where the daily out-of-pocket cost exceeds the actual cost of care, you have no benefit at all which means that the Medicare nursing home benefit, in effect, has become a 20-day SNF benefit.

This year the nursing home copayment will be $61.50 beginning on the 21st day of care. But the latest figures from Blue Cross-Blue Shield show the average cost to Medicare in Wisconsin last year for a day of nursing home care was only $57.68. And today the best guess is in the $60 to $65 range.

Keep in mind that Medicare is paying nursing homes based upon a determination of their costs, not their charges. Yet it seems clear that with a $60 to $65 average, many nursing homes will have costs below the out-of-pocket contribution that Medicare will require of its beneficiaries.

The source of this problem is the Medicare hospital deductible. By law it is set at the average cost of 1 day in the hospital, and the nursing home copayment is set at one-eighth of that amount.

But the hospital deductible has become a casualty of the very success of the new DRG system for hospital inpatient care. This new system has promoted earlier discharges and outpatient care for simple surgery and procedures leaving in its wake a growing number of empty beds which remain a part of the hospital's fixed overhead in the short term. In addition, the Medicare patients who remain in the hospital are on average sicker than those in prior years; the easier cases are no longer in the hospital. Therefore, the average cost of a day in the hospital has jumped from $400 last year to $492 this year, and the out-of-pocket costs of the elderly have risen by 23 percent this year as a result.

While the impact of the increased deductible on hospital care has been widely publicized, there has been little attention to its impact on the nursing home copayment. This is unfortunate; it means that Medicare's promise of 100 days of nursing home care is rapidly becoming a myth. And no one is even talking about it.

CBS REPORTS: "THE VANISHING FAMILY—CRISIS IN BLACK AMERICA"

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, last Saturday, CBS Reports broadcast one of the most extraordinary documentaries in the history of television. Bill Moyers' program, "The Vanishing Family—Crisis in Black America" presented an unusually moving and perceptive analysis of the worsening cycle of pregnancy, unemployment, and welfare that condemns millions of black Americans to lives of poverty and despair.

Bill Moyers' analysis is television at its best; it is also a call to action for all of us in public life to undertake the reforms in public policy that are essential if we are to deal responsibly and effectively with this critical problem of our time.

I believe that all of us in Congress who are concerned with this challenge will appreciate the opportunity to see a full text of the broadcast. I ask unanimous consent that a transcript of Mr. Moyers' program and of the panel discussion that followed it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the transcript was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"THE VANISHING FAMILY—CRISIS IN BLACK AMERICA"

BILL MOYERS. Tell me, raise your hand if you're married.

None of you are married.

Raise your hand if you would like to be married to your baby's father.

One.

[Laughing.]

MOYERS. The rest of you don't plan to get married. Why don't you plan to get married? I'd like to know that.

LA DON. You already have your child to think about, and then a whole family to care for, you know—it's a lot of responsibility. And then you don't want the commitment.

CLARINDA HENDERSON. I wouldn't want no man holding me down, because I think I could make it as a single parent.

MOYERS. But don't you think you might need help in raising that baby from a man?

LA DON. Not really. I didn't have a father. My father wasn't in the home. So, you know, it really . . . male figures are not substantially important in the family.

[Music.]

TIMOTHY MCSEED. I ain't thinking about holding up as far as no sex, my man, you know. If a girl, you know, she's having a baby, carryin' a baby, that's on her, you know. I'm not going to stop my pleasures because of another woman.

MOYERS. What about birth control? What about condoms?

TIMOTHY. I haven't . . . girls don't like them things! They don't like them things. They'll tell you to take them things off. They figure that you sayin' that they filthy or they dirty or something.

MOYERS NARRATION. It's been a startling change in values.

Twenty-five years ago, you would not have heard such things said so freely, because they were not embraced so widely. The strong family was still the backbone of black America, and three out of four children had both parents at home. That is true no longer. Most black children are now growing up without their fathers.

The result is a world turned upside down, as children copy what they see and repeat what they learn.

[Baby crying.]

NARRATION. La Don says she didn't have a father in her home, and doesn't think her children need one. She's not unusual. Half the black families today are headed only by a woman.

Clarinda said she could make it on her own as a single parent. She has never been married, and is raising her daughter without a man's help. She's not unusual. Today, nearly sixty percent of all black children are born out of wedlock.

Timothy said his children are not his responsibility. He has left them to be supported by their mothers and welfare. He's not unusual either.

For La Don and Clarinda and Timothy, and many more like them in cities all over America, the traditional family no longer exists. It has vanished, and something new is taking its place. Single women and the children they're rearing alone are the fastest growing part of the black population. What becomes of the black family in a world where the values are being turned upside down?

CAROLYN WALLACE. If the parent is seventeen and eighteen, uneducated, unmotivated, fooling around, wanderin' around—what's the child gonna learn? Who's to teach them? When you learned something, you was taught by your parents. It was reinforced by school and your neighbors, but it was taught by your parents. Well, if the parents don't know anything, how are they gonna teach the children? So it's not racism that I'm fighting right now, it's the lack of motivation. See, I'm not even talking about racism, maybe later on we'll get back to that. But I think we're destroying ourselves.

THEME MUSIC AND TITLES

ACT I

MOYERS ON CAMERA. This is Newark, New Jersey, one of America's inner cities. "Inner city" is a polite name for ghetto, as in black ghetto. Those of us who don't live in the ghetto are brought here usually by television, and usually only when there are violent pictures to show. But we have to come here if we want to understand those fearsome statistics about the vanishing black family. Now a lot of white families are in trouble, too.

Single parent families are twice as common in America today as they were twenty years ago. But for the majority of white children, "family" still means a father and a mother. This is not true for most black children. For them, things are getting worse. Today, black teenagers have the highest pregnancy rate in the industrial world, and in the black inner city practically no teenage mother gets married. That's no racist comment. What's happening goes far beyond race. Why then do so many teenage girls get pregnant and have children? Why do so many fathers abandon their families? The answers begin with the people here. They told us what happens to family when mothers are children, fathers don't count, and the street is the strongest school.

[Radio, Music, Laughing.]

CLARINDA HENDERSON. OK, OK. Bye/bye.

NARRATION. It is the beginning of another school day in Newark, New Jersey. Another day of class for Clarinda Henderson. She is seventeen, and had hoped to graduate from high school next year. But that was before the birth of her baby.

CLARINDA. I think that having a little baby you could just cuddle in your arms, and just hug all the time, kiss on it, smell, 'cause it smells so sweet. I thought it'd be fun until I had her.

MOYERS. The reality is different?

CLARINDA. The reality just punched me right in the eye. I like had to pinch myself to see if I was here, 'cause I was like, "This is too much."

NARRATION. Clarinda was only fifteen when she got pregnant with her daughter, Shaquna. She is not unusual. Half of all black teenagers become pregnant. Clarinda has never been married; she's still living with her mother at home, where she's raising her baby daughter.

Clarinda goes to a special school for dropouts, after she takes her daughter to a day-care center. She has fifth grade math skills and reads at a sixth grade level.

CLARINDA. When I got pregnant, I said, "Well, I'm gonna have this baby, and she's not gonna stand in the way of my education, I'm not going to let no one stand in the way of my education. I ain't gonna be like these other girls, just drop out, can't get no job, no money, have to be on welfare.

TEACHER. When you're ready on the vocabulary. Bingo.

NARRATION. Clarinda learned about birth control in sex education courses. But she still became pregnant.

MOYERS. Do you think it was a mistake?

CLARINDA. I'll say no. Because I wasn't on, in the, you know, birth control method, and neither was he, and, you know, and we were sexually active. And when it happened, it just happened.

MOYERS. When you think back on that day when you learned you were pregnant, what went through you mind?

CLARINDA. Oh, gosh, how'm I gonna tell my mother? And when I tell my mother, she's gonna make me get an abortion. I was really scared, I think.

MOYERS. Why didn't you want to get an abortion?

CLARINDA. Because I wanted his baby.

MOYERS. What did you like about him?

CLARINDA. His legs.

MOYERS. His legs?

CLARINDA. I got a thing for bow-legged boys.

MOYERS. Bow-legged boys? [Laughs.]

CLARINDA. I love 'em. They have some gorgeous legs, I just don't know.

NARRATION. Darren Lyell is the father of Clarinda's baby. He is eighteen, and lives in central Newark. He dropped out of high school when he was sixteen. He has never had a steady job.

[Music.]

DARREN LYELL. I spend most of my time listening to the radio, and I don't go to school, I don't work. I don't do nothing . . . just like this, killing time.

MOYERS. Did you want to have a baby?

DARREN. Not now . . . I . . . no, not really. It just happened, you know . . . she just popped up pregnant . . . and I just, you know . . .

MOYERS. Were your friends impressed?

DARREN. You know, everybody was telling me, you know, that, you know, she look just like me, and, you know, she's kinda cute and, you know, kinda pretty. But . . . and make me feel good.

MOYERS. Sure.

DARREN. Um . . .

MOYERS. Do any of them have babies?

DARREN. That's all they be doing around here. Making babies and stuff. Making babies.

NARRATION. Darren told us in this neighborhood it's easy to get involved with girls, and easy to get into trouble. Darren has been arrested five times—for stealing, suspicion of homicide, and for possession of a deadly weapon.

MOYERS. When were you arrested for carrying a dangerous weapon, what was it?

DARREN. One of those big machetes . . .

MOYERS. Machete?

DARREN. Knives, big knives.

MOYERS. You mean you just carried it around with you?

DARREN. I used to bring it to school with me.

MOYERS. That's, uh, hard to conceal that, isn't it?

DARREN. Nah, 'cause I had like this blue coat, like a blue goose. I poked a hole in the pocket of it, and I just put it right in there.

MOYERS. Isn't that dangerous?

DARREN. That's the way the stuff was going, you know, like that was the way the people was acting towards me. So I felt like I needed a weapon, 'cause, you know, it seemed like, you know, it's like a war, really like Vietnam.

MOYERS. Have you asked Darren to help you with the baby?

CLARINDA. No, because I see he can't even help himself. He can't . . . it's pitiful to say that. But he can't.

MOYERS. He wasn't prepared to be a father?

CLARINDA. No. And he still isn't.

MOYERS. Were you ready to be a mother?

CLARINDA. Well, no. But now that I am, I just have to take it step by step.

NARRATION. Clarinda relies on welfare to support Shaquna. But it's her mother, Gloria Henderson, who gets the check for the whole family. Gloria, thirty-four, has never been married. She was a teenager when Clarinda was born, just as her own mother—Clarinda's grandmother—had been when Gloria was born.

MOYERS. When you were pregnant, did you assume that you could turn to welfare for help after the baby came?

CLARINDA. Well, yeah. But I didn't have her just to collect welfare. I had her because I felt it would have been a part of me; I would of had somebody to live for and also somebody to love, and love me back.

MOYERS. Is your daughter the first person you've ever loved?

CLARINDA. I really, really love my daughter.

NARRATION. Two months after the birth of their baby, Clarinda was pregnant again by Darren. This time, she had an abortion. She didn't think she could handle two little children while still a teenager herself.

MOYERS. Your grandmother was a single woman with a child, your mother a single woman with a child . . . now you. Why is that happening?

CLARINDA. I really didn't plan on getting pregnant. But, if I really had somebody to really sit down and talk to, like really express my feelings to them, I don't think none of this would've happened. But then when it did happen, my grandmothers like, "I told you this, I told you this." You didn't tell me nothing.

NARRATION. Nobody told Darren anything, either. He, too, lives at home with his mother.

MOYERS. Where's your father?

DARREN. Locked up.

MOYERS. Locked up where?

DARREN. Green Street.

MOYERS. What for?

DARREN. Fighting and stuff—fighting, violence and stuff like that.

MOYERS. Had anybody ever told you what it is like to be a father?

DARREN. I like watchin' others . . . other older, you know . . . had kids . . .

MOYERS. What did you learn from them?

DARREN. I learned it like take a lot of, like, patience, take a lot of patience.

MOYERS. Do you have a lot of patience?

DARREN. I don't got a lot of patience.

NARRATION. Clarinda doesn't always have a lot of patience, either.

CLARINDA. You want to fight? Then don't ask me if I want to fight if you don't want to fight.

DARREN. Get off my porch then.

CLARINDA. Don't say to me . . .

DARREN. Get off my porch then, you know . . .

CLARINDA. Come here, Nook.

DARREN. You like goin' out like that . . .

CLARINDA. No, you went out, you shouldn't have said nothing to me. You done already pissed me off.

DARREN. What'd I do?

NARRATION. Two months after her abortion, Clarinda and Darren broke off their relationship. They see each other rarely now. Once in a while, Clarinda will take Shaquna to visit.

MOYERS. Do you ever think about marrying Clarinda?

Why not?

DARREN. Not now. I ain't thinking about that now . . . that's the last thing on my mind.

MOYERS. You ever feel depressed?

DARREN. I don't be feeling . . . I don't be like sad, I just be like frustrated. I . . . be like, really like frustrated.

MOYERS. What are the odds that your daughter will follow the same route? Because there was your grandmother, your mother, and you.

CLARINDA. No, I will see to that. She won't. I will sit down, I will talk to her about her being a young lady, like, "Quna, if you go out here, you have sex, be sure you are on birth control or, you know, if you do have sex, make sure whoever you're having sex with care about you. Don't just let them just get, just let, you know, let them get over on you thinking they got a piece of the action and they can go tell Tom, Dick and Harry.

MOYERS. Did your mother tell you those things?

CLARINDA. No.

MOYERS. You tell them to yourself?

CLARINDA. I talk to myself in the mirror. [Laughs.]

MOYERS. And you say, "No. No."

CLARINDA. "No. No." Like I say to my daughter, "No. No. No more."

ACT II

NARRATION. Alice Sondra Jackson is twenty-three. She's the mother of two, expecting a third, and is not married. She, too, lives in Newark.

Like nearly half of all black children in America, Alice's children are being raised in poverty. They live a subsidized life in subsidized housing. But that's not what Alice wanted or intended.

Alice lives in one of the toughest neighborhoods in Newark, in the project where she was born and brought up. But she hoped that one day she would move out of here. She graduated from high school, went to business college for a year, and worked steadily until she became pregnant with her first child.

ALICE SONDRA JACKSON. You know, I was doing so good before I was pregnant; I had a little job. I kept money, you know, stuff. But after I had the child, that's when money started going low.

MOYERS. What was your reaction when you found out you were pregnant the first time? Did you intend to get pregnant?

ALICE. It wasn't . . . no, it wasn't planned. But when I got pregnant, I wanted it. I wanted to be a mother, you know, it was exciting to me. I just thought I'd having something of my own, a little child that's gonna call me "Mama." But after you have 'em it's hard, you know, you gotta buy them this, gotta buy them that.

NARRATION. Malik is Alice's firstborn. He is now three years old. Soon after he was born, Alice, then twenty, quit her job to take care of him. Sixteen months later, her second child, Antwan, was born. When we met, she was six months pregnant with her third child.

Tim McSeed is twenty-six, the father of Alice's three children. Though they're not married, they see each other regularly.

ALICE. When I first met him, I didn't like him. But when I started talkin; to him, he seemed like he was like a man that wanted to have a home, have children, take care of 'em.

MOYERS. Did you talk with Timothy about how you were going to support the baby when you were pregnant?

ALICE. No, that's what we didn't do. No, we didn't even talk about how we was going to support the child.

NARRATION. Timothy McSeed held his last steady job two and a half years ago. He's been arrested several times on robbery and drug charges. He was brought up in Newark by his mother, who was sixteen when Timothy was born. His father has another family in another city.

Timothy has a talent for drawing, which he has never developed. He dropped out of high school at sixteen and spent two years in the Job Corps. He was twenty-three when he and Alice had their first child. Timothy does not support any of his children.

MOYERS. How many children do you have?

TIMOTHY MCSEED. Six. [Laughing.]

NARRATION. He fathered those six children by four women. He also had two more children by two other women, but one died in infancy and the other was aborted. We asked him about the birth of his first surviving child.

TIMOTHY. It was kind of a funny experience. Because like me and the girl was just messing around, right, and she was involved with somebody else. She used to be an old girlfriend of mine; she managed to get popped up by me.

MOYERS. OK, that's the second baby. The third was . . .

TIMOTHY. Mustafa. He was the third.

MOYERS. That was by another lady.

TIMOTHY. Uh huh. Mrs. Ward. Yes, I go see him every now and then.

MOYERS. How old is he now?

TIMOTHY. He's five, if I'm not mistaken. Five or four, either one.

MOYERS. And then the fourth one was?

TIMOTHY. Simone. I don't . . . I only say her twice. Two times.

MOYERS. What happened to her?

TIMOTHY. It's a family problem. You know, the father didn't want me to see the mother and all that, you know, so I got tired of running behind her, and I found me someone else. I didn't have to sweat it, because I guess the father was taking care of them anyway, so, you know . . .

MOYERS. How did it feel to have those . . .

TIMOTHY. Women?

MOYERS. No, kids. Kids.

TIMOTHY. Well, you see, if it ain't one thing you done—like artwork for instance, you look at your art and say, "This is something that I've done." Just like the carpenter, here's something that you've done. You can see what you've done if it's anything. If you don't do nothing, you can see something, you know, what your life was, you know, it was to you.

MOYERS. So the kids are sort of artwork?

TIMOTHY. Well, not really, But, you know, like they might grow up to be doctors, or actors, you know—and you can say, "Look, that's my boy, that's my girl," you know. Where there's, you know, some people that can't have children at all.

NARRATION. Their mothers raise Timothy's children, and welfare pays for them. On the first day of each month at noon, the mothers gather outside the project's mail room, waiting for the postman to deliver their checks.

ALICE. We call it "Mother's Day."

MOYERS. Why?

ALICE. 'Cause us mothers, we getting our check that day, getting their welfare checks. So we call it "Mother's Day."

[Voices.]

NARRATION. Alice's welfare check comes to three hundred and eighty-five dollars a month. She cashes it at the corner store. She gets another one hundred and twelve dollars in food stamps.

ALICE. I don't think I would have had the second two children if I didn't think welfare was there. I don't like welfare because it makes me lazy.

MOYERS. It does?

ALICE. Yeah, it makes you lazy just to sit around and wait for a monthly check to come in. You know, I just like to work; I like money coming every week or every two weeks.

MOYERS. Why doesn't Timothy help you take care of those kids?

ALICE. One thing I do know about Timothy, that if he did have a job I know he would take care of me and the children and the bills. But what's holding him back—well this is what he tells me all the time—he figure I'm going to be with another guy, or I'm going to slip away from him while he at work. But that don't make no sense to me.

MOYERS. Don't you get mad sometimes?

ALICE. I get mad a lot of times about financially support from Timothy.

MOYERS. What do you say to him?

ALICE. I always say it ain't that hard and get a job, go out there and look for a job. 'Cause I'm sick and tired of just laying back waiting for a welfare check. I say, "This is not how I want to live the rest of my life. This is not the way I planned for my future to be."

MOYERS. Does it make you feel bad that you can't support your kids?

TIMOTHY. Yes.

MOYERS. How do they make it, where do they get the money?

TIMOTHY. Well, the majority of the mothers are on welfare. And welfare gives them the stipend for the month. So what I'm not doing the government does.

MOYERS. What would happen if the government didn't?

TIMOTHY. Guess it would be a big disaster, I guess. Cause you can't give something that you don't have. In order to give, you got to have for yourself.

MOYERS. See, people out there watching are going to say, "Why didn't he think about that before he brought six kids into the world?"

TIMOTHY. Well, the mother had a choice; she could of had an abortion or she could of kept the child. She decided the way that she wanted to have the child, so therefore I guess it's not sweating her or nothing—I mean, it's not bothering her.

MOYERS. You think it's her fault if she gets pregnant? I mean, you popped her.

TIMOTHY. Well, maybe, maybe not. They say, "Mama's baby, Papa's maybe," know what I mean?

NARRATION. A week before their last baby is born, Alice comes for what is only her fourth visit to the doctor during her pregnancy.

ALICE. Yeah, I was very much worried, and I was kinda unhappy being pregnant, you know, to know that I'm having a third child and I'm not doing so good with my two I have already.

NURSE. Miss Jackson? Come with me, please.

ALICE. As you know, the months went by, I just had to deal with it, being pregnant, and knowing it's my child, and I'm going to have a child, and I'm just going to have to support it the same way I supported them.

I'd do better if I could do better.

MOYERS. Is that the last one?

ALICE. Well, I ain't gonna say that, cause I said that when I had my first one. So then I had second one, and I said that with my second one and I had me a third one. So I ain't gonna say that.

MOYERS. Did you think about birth control?

ALICE. No, I didn't even think about birth control. I was afraid of birth control, because I always heard that birth control give you cancer, and all that stuff.

MOYERS. What about Timothy? Did you talk to him about taking precautions, about being careful?

ALICE. Yeah, I talked to him about being careful, about, you know, birth control.

MOYERS. But . . .

ALICE. Umm . . .

MOYERS. But?

ALICE. But?

MOYERS. Did he?

ALICE. No, he wasn't with it.

NURSE. Nine twenty-four.

[Delivery room.]

NARRATION. On Father's Day, Alice and Timothy had their third son—Hakim Lamonte Jackson, seven pounds, seven ounces.

TIMOTHY. Yea, little boy! Little boy!

ALICE. That baby tried to kill me!

TIMOTHY. I'm the king! I'm the king! Hey!

NURSE. That's it, honey.

TIMOTHY. How you feeling now? You feeling all right, sweetheart?

ALICE. No. I feel kind of sore. My stomach . . . pain.

ALICE. Fat face little baby.

You hungry? I know you're hungry.

TIMOTHY. Let me see my little man here.

MOYERS. So many women, so many children . . . do you ever think that maybe you shouldn't do it unless you can be sure you don't have a kid?

TIMOTHY. Not really, 'cause I'm highly sexed. But I have ways of cooling myself down, you know. Because like when you're dealing with one female, and you're not dealing with another female, having sex with her too much is bad, so you have to like, you now, set a schedule when you should do it and when you should not.

MOYERS. You seem to break your schedule sometimes.

TIMOTHY. Well, most women say, "You're a baby-maker." I just got strong sperm, myself. [Laughs.]

MOYERS. Would you have had these kids if you'd thought about them in advance?

TIMOTHY. No.

MOYERS. All were an accident?

TIMOTHY. Yeah. You could say that.

MOYERS. Were you just having a good time?

TIMOTHY. Yeah, a lovely time. I enjoyed myself.

MOYERS. And you didn't think about marrying any of these women except the first one, the first girl?

TIMOTHY. Yes, Well, I'm going to marry Alice.

MOYERS. Sondra?

TIMOTHY. Oh, yes, we're going to get married.

MOYERS. Do you love Sondra?

TIMOTHY. Yes, a lot. A great deal.

MOYERS. Does she love you?

TIMOTHY. The girl crazy about me.

MOYERS. Tell me, why don't you get married?

TIMOTHY. Well, see, I'm old-fashioned. I want a big wedding, that's that. My uncles and my aunts, you know, they all had their little tuxedos, and, you know, I'm going to have mine, too.

MOYERS. I thought you were going to say to me, "Because I can't afford to at the moment."

TIMOTHY. No, that ain't it. Because I'm going to find me something, and I'm going to get something. See, I'm strong in that spot.

MOYERS. When?

TIMOTHY. Whenever. I'm going to keep on trying. I'll never give up.

MOYERS. You know, you feel very responsible for your children, and Timothy doesn't. What does that say?

ALICE. Umm . . . sometimes I think like that I said, "Here I am, I got two children, one on the way"—well, this was before the first one. I'm doing this all by myself, and sometimes, you know, if you sit down and think about that, I know I really get very upset. Cause I don't think he really understands that I'm here, you know, taking care of all this really by myself. If he think like that, I think he'll do something; I don't think he really understand that I'm doing that.

MOYERS. Why do you let him off the hook? Why do you put up with it?

ALICE. Sometimes I be like telling him to leave me alone, it's over with. But every time I do that, when he not with me even the same day or the next day, I feel, you know, lonely without him. So like, you know, I just get angry and say them things, I really don't be meaning 'em.

MOYERS. Do you love him?

ALICE. Yes, I love him.

MOYERS. Does he love you?

ALICE. Yes, I think he love me, too.

ACT III

MOYERS ON CAMERA. There's a famous book about the black experience in America called The Invisible Man. Ironically, the young black man today is anything but invisible. He's the one who shows up in the highest unemployment rates. He's right there in the top of the crime statistics. He's the one most threatening to his black neighbors and the one most feared in the mind of white America. Every teenage boy growing up can go either way, but the son of a young single woman in the ghetto is pressured to go the wrong way every time he hits the streets.

MOYERS. What do you see for your future out there? You're how old now?

BERNARD WARDRICK. I'm fifteen, and right now if I keep going like it's going now I really think I'll probably make it, and then again I probably won't have all the things that I really want in life right now. But I think I will have most of the things I want.

[Music.]

NARRATION. For teenagers like Bernard Wardrick and his friends Bosky, "C" and Mike, there are no familiar road maps for the way up and out. It is the street and the media that teach a boy here how to become a man.

Bernard dreams of making it as a rap star. He and his friends have formed a group, "The Educated Three."

ANNOUNCER. I like that. Now here they come, Newark, New Jersey, your own "Educated Three."

MOYERS. What is rapping?

BERNARD. To me, it's like poetry, because, you know, I could just sit down and write it. I can sit at the table or whatever or wherever I'm at and I can just think of it.

MOYERS. What does it take to be a good rapper? What's the skill?

BERNARD. You gotta have style, class, and originality. (Laughs) Anybody can rap. You just got put yourself into it, and make it mean something.

[Music.]

NARRATION. "The Educated Three" tell the story of the only life they know—the life of their block. They were born and raised here, in homes without fathers, and most of their time is spent here. The world they describe is no nursery rhyme, as Bernard's friend "C" told us.

"C" [rapping]. "All the people got guns, they're trying to stick up kids while their mother is at home shedding tears. Because the son that she thought she had brought up right is on the streets leading a terrible life. He's walkin' down a road headed for nowhere. From my point of view he don't even care. Because the attitude he has makes him care about nothin' Not his mother, his brother, or even his cousin. He think life is all about for the streets. Bein' a two-time loser and a petty thief. But everybody knows that you're the thief of the week because you're no good for nothin', you swear you're good for somethin'

But, boy, the only thing you good for is frontin'."

MOYERS. You wrote that?

"C". Yeah.

MOYERS. Who'd you write about?

"C". I judged a lot on myself, 'cause I used to be out there, man.

MOYERS. Out there on the street.

"C". Yeah, eighteen years. I've seen a lot happen that I'd never thought I'd see.

MOYERS. When you're out on that street, is it dangerous?

BERNARD. It's dangerous, it's dangerous. Anything can happen to you.

"C". Yeah, but it's how you make it, sure.

MOYERS. Can a guy get killed on the street easily?

"C". Sure. See how you blink your eye? Like that. Yeah.

BERNARD. Can get killed just like that.

NARRATION. The leading cause of death for young black men is murder. One in twenty-one will be killed before the age of twenty-five. Bernard was shot and robbed by two teenagers when he was fifteen. Four months later, he was arrested for carrying a gun. That is not unusual—nearly half of young men in the inner city are arrested before they reach eighteen. Trouble, Bernard told us, waits at every corner.

MOYERS. How does a guy keep from falling into that trap you described in that rap?

"C". If you see everybody else robbin', man, or selling drugs, you supposed, it takes a wise man to learn from another man's mistakes.

BERNARD. The adults gotta set an example for the kids. They see the adults do it, you know, that's what they gonna do too, eventually.

MOYERS. Who would be an example?

BERNARD. My family, my mother.

NARRATION. His mom is Brenda Wardrick, thirty years old, the mother of four children by three different men. She has never been married. She raises her children alone, in a daily tug-of-war with the street.

MOYERS. Tell me something about the street out there.

BRENDA WARDRICK. It's a battle. It's almost like . . . and I think most parents feel the same, that you fear for your children leaving home. They can leave out and walk right across the street and trouble can get in their way.

MOYERS. What's the hardest thing about being a single parent?

BRENDA. It's hard, you know, understanding them sometimes. And they have difficulty understanding me, 'cause I'm a young parent, and sometimes they act like I'm their sister as well as their mother, you know.

NARRATION. Brenda was just fourteen when she became pregnant with Bernard, her first child. Bernard's father was fifteen. By the time she was in her early twenties, there were three more children, each unplanned. To support them, Brenda works on and off as a nurse's aide, but she could not make ends meet without welfare. None of the children's fathers give her any financial support.

MOYERS. I don't understand what happens that causes so many fathers not to take responsibility for the kids they created, or helped to create.

BRENDA. It's easier on their pockets if they can . . . most of the men today don't, you know, assume their responsibilities as they should, not that they can't. They just don't.

MOYERS. Well, I'd get very mad if I were a mother. I think I would.

BRENDA. Oh, I get angry. But getting angry isn't gonna solve anything. And then sometimes, you know, their fathers, they feel like if they're gonna support them then they have to have more time with me. And I don't feel that that's really necessary, you know.

MOYERS. You'd rather take the burden of the children alone than to have to . . .

BRENDA. I wouldn't rather. But I have.

MOYERS. What do your children mean to you?

BRENDA. My friends, they're my world, you know. When I wake up in the morning, see, you know, if you don't have a husband or a man with you, your children are always there. So you have someone to call your own. See, your children will smile when nobody else will.

MOYERS. Do you want your kids to get married?

BRENDA. Sure, especially my daughter. My boys, they'll probably be—whatcha call it—freelancers.

MOYERS. Freelancers? Like their fathers?

BRENDA. Yeah. Maybe, I don't know.

MOYERS. That does seem to be the pattern.

BRENDA. YEAH . . .

WOMAN [Singing.] "Come a long way . . . oh, yeah . . ."

NARRATION. Once a single mother like Brenda would not have been so alone in raising children. She was born here in rural North Carolina, surrounded by an extended Baptist family. But her father went north looking for work, and Brenda was raised in Newark. Many summers she came back south to visit her kinfolk. They still live here, and every year hold a family reunion. With her present boyfriend, Lamonte Banks, Brenda brought her children down for the occasion.

She wanted Bernard especially to see a world different from the streets of Newark.

WOMAN [Singing.] "Jesus fed me when I was hungry . . . Oh, ask the Lord, come a long way."

Thank you.

[Applause.]

WOMAN. That was just beautiful. She told us how we made it to the family reunion.

MAN. Let us pray. "Almightly, all wise and eternal God . . . "

NARRATION. The church was part of the extended family. It was sanctuary, community, comfort—brothers and sisters in faith and consolation.

WOMAN [Singing.] "Oh, what a . . . "

GROUP [Singing.] "Fellowship. What a peace of mind . . . "

BRENDA. Being away from people that you love and care about—these reunions sort of just makes up for the distance, you know, spend a little time, you go back, and you look forward to the next time. Keeps us together, keeps me goin' . . .

BERNARD. I'm lighting this for my great-grandfather, and my great-grandmother, Cora Wardrick.

BRENDA. And I'm hoping my children will get together and give reunions to keep the flow, to keep close with their family.

NARRATION. More than blood, place, and faith held these families together through hard times. There was memory, never more alive than at the old family burial ground. Brenda's three aunts brought her and the kids to see where their roots run—far from the main highway, farther still from Newark.

MOYERS. Did you have to work, work those days in the field?

WOMAN. Sure. We worked in the field. But now, they got so much equipment now, people don't have to work hard now.

MOYERS. What was the hardest?

WOMAN. Pickin' cotton I think.

Pickin' cotton, that was the hardest.

MOYERS. You all really have strong ties here, don't you, to this piece of earth?

WOMAN. Oh, of course, sure.

MOYERS. Is this cemetary all Wardricks?

WOMAN. As far as I know, yes.

WOMAN. This is the Wardrick family.

MOYERS. Now, that would be Bernard's great-great-grandfather?

WOMAN. Right.

MOYERS. What kind of man was he?

WOMAN. Wonderful.

WOMAN. Wonderful.

WOMAN. Wonderful.

MOYERS. Brenda, do you try to tell your kids about the family?

BRENDA. Yes, I do, as much as I possibly can, and whenever I come home I always ask questions. There's a lot that I don't know, and I'm still learning a lot about them . . .

MOYERS. There's a lot you want to know?

BRENDA. Yes, yes, yes. And I want my children to know.

MOYERS. Why?

BRENDA. Because I think they should know who they are, and where they come from, and what we all stand for. And I just get a good feeling when I'm here, you know, and I want to share that with my kids.

WOMAN. Together we stand—divided we must fall.

MOYERS. Together we stand . . .

WOMAN. Yes, sir.

MOYERS. Do you think that's true as a family?

WOMAN. Yes, sir.

MOYERS. It's hard to hold a family together, though, isn't it?

WOMAN. True. That's true.

MOYERS. Think it's harder today than when you were little?

WOMAN. Seems to be. I can remember years ago, when if something happened over here, our family in Virginia was right here.

MOYERS. Everybody pitch in . . .

WOMAN. Right. And now you never hear of that. So now it's up to us to try to keep it together, 'cause this is what we were taught, love and affection. That's the only way we can make it.

MOYERS. Bernard, this is such a change from Newark. What do you think when you're here in this place?

BERNARD. Um, I enjoy coming to visit. But, you know, I wouldn't like to live here, 'cause . . .

MOYERS. Why?

BERNARD. The environment isn't the same. You got about twenty or thirty houses all on one block, and down here, you know, you've got like a half a mile. (Laughs)

MOYERS. A lot more action up there, right?

BERNARD. Yeah. I enjoy when I come down here, I love to visit, but I wouldn't like to live down here.

MOYERS. What do you think your life would be without if you didn't have these folks here and didn't come to these reunions?

BRENDA. Empty. Maybe almost not belonging somewhere. I just couldn't imagine not having this here, you know.

MOYERS. Of course, you have these reunions, and this place, and these people to fall back on. What do you think your children will have to fall back on?

BRENDA. This is what I'm trying to share with them, so that they will have this, too.

MOYERS. But it's this, not Newark, isn't it?

BRENDA. No, they won't . . . they're, they're missing a lot. Because this is where I was born, and they were born in Newark. I don't think they have . . . they're not as fortunate.

[Music, Street Noise.]

NARRATION. But Bernard calls this home and doesn't miss the extended family that means so much to his mother. His notion of extended family is something different—the rap group, friends from the street and Brenda's boyfriend, Lamonte Banks.

Lamonte is thirty-one years old, and much of what has happened over the last generation to the young black man who grew up in a broken family in the inner city is reflected in his experience. Lamonte was raised in Newark by a single mother and grew up on the street. Now he has two children of his own who live with their mother in another part of town.

He works when he can cleaning oil drums, but does not support his children or Brenda's. He has become one of Bernard's acting role models. He told us what it was like to spend his teenage years, as Bernard is doing, in the school of the street.

LAMONTE BANKS. I grew up hard.

MOYERS. Hard?

LAMONTE. I grew up, basically, being the man of my family at thirteen. Mommy was there, but Mommy was like always saying, well, she needed this or it was hard, and, you know, sometimes we'd go in the house and didn't have no food. You know what I mean. And I couldn't take that sometimes, you know. So I would take to the streets.

MOYERS. And?

LAMONTE. And whatever was necessary, so I could bring my mother some type of relief or help.

MOYERS. Steal? Hustling?

LAMONTE. If it took that.

MOYERS. How did you, as a kid, get caught up in that street life?

LAMONTE. Hanging with a crowd.

MOYERS. What happened? Give me some examples.

LAMONTE. I was . . . basically, I was going with this girl, and, uh, at twelve years old, and these other guys liked her, and they jumped me. And I got me a bat, and I put me some nails in this bat, and I taped this bat up with these nails in it. And I went looking for these guys, and each one I caught I hit them with this bat, and I hurt them with this bat, you know.

MOYERS. What happened?

LAMONTE. Um, they parents came to my mother with the police, and they locked me up. And several years later I shot a guy. Out of anger.

MOYERS. Anger?

LAMONTE. Anger. What he had done to me had maybe hurt my feelings, but not so much to the point where I should have did what I done.

MOYERS. What'd he do?

LAMONTE. He spit on me.

MOYERS. And you shot him?

LAMONTE. And I shot him. Not that I probably couldn't beat him, but I was just that angry to the point where I wanted to kill somebody.

MOYERS. And you had the gun on you?

LAMONTE. I had a rifle. Not a gun, a rifle.

MOYERS. Was it normal to carry a gun when you were growing up?

LAMONTE. Yeah, to protect yourself.

MOYERS. What does a kid need to know to be smart on the street, to be a big man?

LAMONTE. To be hateful, to be mean—don't care about the next person. If you get in my way, I don't go around—I go over you.

MOYERS. A doctor told me yesterday that one out of every fifteen kids on the streets in Newark could be dead by the end of this year, there's so much violence.

LAMONTE. It's . . . it's . . . it's a lot, you know.

MOYERS. How are you going to keep Bernard from being one of those?

LAMONTE. Well, basically, Bernard . . . you give him, you give him a strict rule, and hopefully he follows it. You know, he ain't no special child or nothin' like that. But if you tell Bernard something, Bernard will listen, and Bernard will do it.

MOYERS. Is there a tug-of-war between the street and what you imagine yourself becoming one day?

BERNARD. Yes, because I really be hoping to get up out of this. And it be times I be wondering, well, how I'm going to do it, and if I'll be able to do it. But I really think I'll be able to. Because I'm strong.

MOYERS. The street's strong too, though, isn't it?

BERNARD. Yes, it is. It really is. Because it's a lot of things that's out there that be, you know, pull you back. But you stand to do right things, and do the right thing, you can make it.

MOYERS. I actually get the sense talking to Bernard that he's still a little boy struggling to be a man, and is more boy than man.

BRENDA. Yes. Yes.

MOYERS. Do you think he has a chance to get out of here to a good environment? Fresh start?

BRENDA. I hope so. I hope so. And that's all I can say as to hope.

MOYERS. Does your heart sometimes beat twice when you see him walk down those steps and out into that?

BRENDA. Every day. Every day. I wonder if he'll make it, reach his destination safely, and then return back home. My relief is when I hear his key turn in the door in the afternoon, and at least I know he's back home.

ACT IV

MOYERS ON camera. You won't find in these neighborhoods the prime time family of Bill Cosby. There are strong, successful black families in America—families that affirm parental authority and the values of discipline, work, and achievement. But not many of them live here. Still, not every girl in the inner city ends up as a teenage mother. Not every young man goes into crime. There are people here who have stayed to fight for these kids. They're outnumbered by the con artists and the pushers; it's not an even match. But they stand for authority and morality, and they give some of the kids here a bracing dose of unsentimental love.

NARRATION. When their own fathers are missing, kids need someone else to stand in—to practice damage control, lest the streets take over. For these kids, that someone is Detective Shahid Jackson of the Newark Police. He came by his street smarts the hard way.

DET. SHAHID JACKSON. Well, I came up out of the streets, so I know how to get around a lot of that stuff, and I guess the older you get the more you learn. I was fortunate enough coming up that I never got caught. And I grew out of the streets. And yet, I still have some of the street in me.

NARRATION. There was a time when he wasn't sure he would make it off those streets. He was an unmarried father at eighteen, and he had his share of troubles. But he was raised by two parents—his father was a Baptist minister—and they pushed him to make something of himself.

SHAHID. On Sunday morning on my block, you would see each family, almost, coming out, going to church. You know, you don't see that anymore, the family unity.

NARRATION. When he was twenty-one, Shahid Jackson joined the Police Department. Although he handled security for us while we were in Newark, his beat is the kids of the neighborhood, who look up to him as if he were their father. What he can do with them here, he knows, is just warm-up for what they face out of the ring and out of his reach.

SHAHID. You're goin' for the title . . . work, work, work, work, work, work, . . . time!

MOYERS. What have you learned about these kids in those four years?

SHAHID. That they need somebody to love 'em. You know, they identify with us because we don't, excuse the expression, we don't take any crap. You know, you come in here, you gotta be disciplined, you gotta, you know, follow the rules and regulations. Because when they go out of here and deal with life, they gonna have to follow rules and regulations in life.

NARRATION. Self-control and self-esteem—far more important than a good left hook. That's his message to kids like Bernard Wardrick. He's been coaching Bernard for the past four years.

SHAHID. There's like a big brother/father image with me and Bernard. There's been times when he's gotten me mad, and I've spanked him, you know, and his mother knows I'll spank him, and he knows I'll spank him. 'Cause sometimes that's what a kid needs to know.

Freedom is a lot of times destruction. The more freedom a man has, a lot of times he'll just self-destruct. So I try to, you know, keep 'em in a little cage . . . keep 'em in my arms.

MOYERS. A cage or their arms—somebody has to say, "No."

SHAHID. Yes. Somebody has to say, "No, you cannot do this."

MOYERS. A lot of these kids grow up with nobody saying, "No."

SHAHID. Right.

MOYERS. And you think it's important for them to have men around?

SHAHID. Yeah, I think, uh, you know, if you have a one parent family and its's a mother, she can not teach all of the things that a man can teach a son. There's no way.

MOYERS. So where do they learn the routine techniques of just daily work and living? They don't?

SHAHID. Unless they get it from their parents, they'll get it from the streets.

MOYERS. How do these kids on the streets make it?

SHAHID. He could either be a stick-up man, if he stays in the streets. He could be a mugger, he could be a drug dealer. There's so many different things. Like, you get a kid who's a good boxer, and, uh, a drug dealer may say, "Hey, you want to make so much money a day? Just make sure nobody sticks up my man here."

MOYERS. He becomes a soldier for the drug dealer?

SHAHID. Or a strong-arm, you know.

MOYERS. Helping to protect the drug dealer.

SHAHID. Helping to protect him. 'Cause if he can make a hundred dollars a day, or sixty dollars a day just standin' there watchin' something, and, you know, he does it. That's the battle you gotta deal with, you know, that's the war. You try to convince them that stuff in the streets isn't what's in their best interest.

MOYERS. Does it worry you that Bernard could fall into that?

SHAHID. I think that he could go either way. But I think if he does it would be something that would really hurt me. So I don't think I'll let him go that way, you know; he's like a son to me.

MOYERS. What do you think's ahead for kids like Timothy and Alice Sondra?

SHAHID. That's going to be rough. It's like hell where they live, and Alice is sweet as hell, but she loves Timothy. I would say if Alice had a husband that was strong she could do something with her life.

MOYERS. Is a kid like Timothy . . . what happens to a kid like that down the road?

SHAHID. He's like a guy on a trip without a road map. Timothy's just out there. Timothy doesn't know which way he wants to go, what he wants to do. Timothy is a guy with great talent as far as art, the kid can draw anything. But Timothy is a ladies' man.

MOYERS. Is that a point of pride with him, accomplishment?

SHAHID. To him, I imagine, yeah, it's an accomplishment.

MOYERS. Where does he get any money, Shahid? He doesn't work; he told me he hadn't had a job in two years . . .

SHAHID. Oh, Alice gets, uh, assistance I imagine.

MOYERS. Welfare?

SHAHID. Yeah, welfare and stuff. And . . .

MOYERS. That happen alot? The mother gets public assistance and helps a guy on the side?

SHAHID. Oh, uh, I don't know if you would say they help 'em, but, you know, it's a lot of guys that I know that just goes around lookin' for welfare mothers. And they may have six of 'em like that and get a little piece of money out of each of 'em. That's their job, you know, that's their hustle.

MOYERS. What do you think about welfare?

SHAHID. Welfare to me . . . some people need it, you know, I'll be for real—some people really, actually need it. And then others take advantage of it.

MOYERS. Sondra, Alice told me yesterday that she thinks welfare has made her lazy.

SHAHID. Yeah, because it's there. You know that your food is going to be there every month, 'cause with welfare finance come food stamps. Then you get Medicaid to cover your medical expenses. Welfare is doing everything; you're married to welfare. A lot of the women, they more married to welfare than the guys layin' in the bed next to 'em. 'Cause he's just a physical thing. The whole backbone of the family is coming out of downtown or out of uptown offices.

MOYERS. Government offices . . . .

SHAHID. Yeah.

MOYERS. Does this cycle of dependency . . . I mean, what does it do to the values of these kids?

SHAHID. They see it as a game, you know—somebody owes me something, somebody's gonna take care of me. There's not the self-esteem.

MOYERS. What do you think's ahead for kids like Timothy?

SHAHID. Maybe he'll get shot at, he'll pick up a gun to protect himself and he'll get shot at by the police officer pulling it, or he'll get arrested.

MOYERS. Some of these kids are just losers, aren't they? Sad as it is.

SHAHID. I mean, yeah, you you . . . you're born into a dead end. You know, and you're in that rut. If you're born into that cycle situation, how do you escape? That's the biggest question that I would like to answer. See, I just started gettin' these kids to know it.

MOYERS. Why do they have kids so early? Why do these children have children? This is a dead end; that's a perfect description for it.

SHAHID. Well, when . . . when I was growin' up, sex was almost a dirty word. Now, sex is what's happening. You know, they see sex on TV, sex in the movies, sex everywhere, you know. And some girls think it's cute walking down the street pregnant.

MOYERS. Don't you ever get discouraged?

SHAHID. Oh, I get discouraged. I lock people up, I get in fights . . . .

MOYERS. Don't you ever want to walk away from it?

SHAHID. Yes, but I feel like so many people have done that. To me, I hate to lose. I hate to lose. And I never would have started workin' with kids if I . . . you know, for me to walk away from it, I'd feel like I lost.

NARRATION. Dr. George Jackson is a practicing psychologist who teaches at Howard University. He is blind. Three days a week he counsels Newark kids referred to him by the courts and the social workers.

Dr. Jackson cannot see. But he has heard over and over what the breakdown of the family means to children.

DR. GEORGE JACKSON. We see depression, we see terrible anger. We see a lack of expectancy.

MOYERS. What are they angry about?

DR. JACKSON. Children are born, uh, without any understanding as to how to manage their feelings. And its through the training and teaching that these foundations are set. Um, children who are the children of children are not being trained to understand how to manage their feelings. So they want when they want what they want it when they want it—and when they don't get it, they get angry.

MOYERS. I talked to a young man yesterday, thirty now, but he described what happened to him when he was fifteen, how he took a baseball bat to somebody who'd messed with his girlfriend, how he actually shot somebody who had spit on him. What causes that hair-trigger emotion?

DR. JACKSON. If you have no respect for uh, uh life, you then will try to destroy or dismantle another person; it won't matter to you. Such a person doesn't have a conscience. And I think that, uh, again, we don't have the foundations. The foundations weren't set.

MOYERS. We've talked to one twenty-seven year old father, he has seven kids he's not caring for, seven kids by several different women. Why? Why does that happen?

DR. JACKSON. If you're a rolling stone, and if the father before you was a rolling stone, or there are no values to constrain you from this behavior, then you have . . . you do this, and you do this with impunity.

MOYERS. This fellow even seemed proud of it. It becomes a badge of honor?

DR. JACKSON. Right. And it's the only badge of honor that you expect to get.

MOYERS. Do they feel any sense of guilt over their impotence as fathers?

DR. JACKSON. No . . . um, not the kind of guilt that would be appropriate to changing the behavior.

MOYERS. Are we breeding a new outlaw society?

DR. JACKSON. We're breeding a society more that will destroy itself.

MOYERS. There are people saying, "Well, that doesn't bother me—I mean, as long as they stay in Newark and shoot each other, and mug each other, screw each other . . . so what do I care?"

DR. JACKSON. But what goes around comes around. It may appear that these individuals are on, um, reservations; they're isolated. But you cannot really divorce yourself from what happens to other people in this country. And if you design a society, a subsociety where people will annihilate themselves, it won't be long before this becomes a disease and infects the entire population.

MOYERS. You don't think we can run to the suburbs anymore?

DR. JACKSON. No. I think you can run, but you can't hide.

JAMES WALLACE. All right, who was the last people on the field?

NARRATION. James Wallace chose not to run or to hide. He learned in his own youth that one person who cares can make a difference.

MR. WALLACE. When I came up, I wasn't any, uh, what you call an angel; I did little things. I was a one parent family. I only had a mother. That's why I can relate to these kids. There was another old man that took an interest in me and showed me the right way.

MOYERS. And he said to you, "You matter."

MR. WALLACE. Yes, yes, he said, "You have more to offer than what you're doing."

NARRATION. Twenty years ago, James Wallace began telling children they mattered. At first, he ran afterschool programs.

Now he and his wife, Carolyn, head the International Youth Organization, a community center in the heart of Newark. If James Wallace is a surrogate father to many kids, Carolyn Wallace is a surrogate mother. She's seen too many children grow up and stumble not to be angry.

CAROLYN WALLACE. If the parent is seventeen and eighteen, uneducated, unmotivated, fooling around, wanderin' around—what's the child going to learn? Who's the teacher? When you learned something, you were taught by your parents; it was reinforced by school and your neighbors. But it was taught by your parents. Your parents said, "Bill, you'd better not do that, don't put that plug over there—you gonna get a whippin'," right? Your parents did it. Well, if the parents don't know anything, how are they going to teach the children? Now if we have a generation of that kind of thing happening and the kids that are up, coming up under that, then we got another generation of lost young people.

MOYERS. Why are there so many single parent households?

MRS. WALLACE. Have you been walking the streets of Newark lately? All our young men are out on the corner—just absolutely doing nothing. That's the problem.

MOYERS. Why? What's happened to those young men? What's happened to the black men?

MRS. WALLACE. It's like they've given up; it's like they're not really a part of what's going on.

MOYERS. Why are they not . . . why have they given up?

MRS. WALLACE. There aren't that many jobs, OK, for the laborer like there used to be . . . and they're just totally unmotivated. And society has made living, for the woman without the husband or with the male, easy.

MOYERS. Oh?

MRS. WALLACE. Yeah, welfare. I think welfare is not the best thing for everybody.

MOYERS. Tell me why.

MRS. WALLACE. Because it provides you with some kind of income that you sooner or later just settle for. I know, I was on welfare. I've been on welfare.

MOYERS. Are you suggesting that we do away with welfare?

MRS. WALLACE. No. I'm saying it has to be upgraded. For instance, I have some young people here that are on welfare, OK, but would like to work. But they can't work and make a coin because everything you make is taken away from your check.

MOYERS. Can you push the solution even further back? Is there any way to stop the cycle of teenage pregnancies?

MRS. WALLACE. That's so difficult to even talk about. In my heart, I think I have a solution. And I know now that it may rub people the wrong way. But I believe that teenage pregnancy cannot be stopped by programs; it has to be morals, and morals come from God. And somewhere along the line, the black family kind of strayed away from that. And I believe we need it.

MOYERS. You say the moral values have changed?

MRS. WALLACE. Oh, yes. It's morally acceptable to have babies. It was not morally acceptable years ago. That's hurting the black family.

MOYERS. What I hear you saying is that even though racism may have brought about these circumstances, even though society may have created conditions that are terrible, you're saying you have to be responsible, you have to practice discipline and self-restraint?

MRS. WALLACE. That's right. We are destroying ourselves. Now, it might have motivated and plotted and seeded with racism, but we're content to be in this well now, OK, we're just content to be in this mud, and we need to get out of it. Uh, there aren't any great white people running around in this block tearing up stuff. It's us; we've got to stop doing that.

MOYERS. Does the civil rights movement, which came to its peak in the Sixties, have anything to say to this?

MRS. WALLACE. Well, "civil rights" to the young people now is a foreign word. What does it really mean to them? They don't have any knowledge about it.

MOYERS. The issue now is different, isn't it?

MRS. WALLACE. Yes, it is. I'm quite sure it is. If Martin Luther King were alive, he would not be talking about, uh, the things I think he was talking about—labor and all that. I think he'd be talking about the black family.

MOYERS. And you're worried about the survival of the black family. You think it's precarious?

MRS. WALLACE. I think it's all gonna be an endangered species.

MOYERS. Even though the messages that kids are getting from society seem to say, "Do anything you want to," the United States government, the government of New Jersey, a white man like Moyers cannot step in and say to young black kids, "It's not right to have children out of wedlock, welfare needs to be changed, you've got to take responsibility." Who's going to say these things to these kids?

MRS. WALLACE. Why can't you say it?

MOYERS. They won't listen to me.

MRS. WALLACE. It doesn't make any difference; you've got to say it anyway. They may not listen to me, either. But I'm saying if you say it in your corner and I say it in my corner, and everybody's saying it, it's going to be like a drumbeat, and sooner or later it will sound. But it's not just for me to talk about, it's for all of us to talk about. And I think it's going to surpass color. And you're not going to be safe, I'm not going to be safe, and nobody's gonna to be safe unless we all send out this drumbeat—hey, let's deal with it. Let's deal with the problem.

PANEL DISCUSSION OF "THE VANISHING FAMILY—CRISIS IN BLACK AMERICA"

(CBS News Correspondent Bill Moyers)

PANEL PARTICIPANTS

Rev. Jesse Jackson, Founder of PUSH and Chairman, National Rainbow Coalition.

Eleanor Holmes Norton, Professor of Law, Georgetown University Law Center, Washington, D.C.

Dr. Glenn C. Loury, Professor of Political Economy, Harvard University.

Charles Knox, Newark, N.J. Police Director.

BILL MOYERS. So far, we've listened this evening to the people who were actually living the experience that was the subject of this broadcast. Now we want to hear from some people who come at the issue from different angles.

With me are:

The Reverend Jesse Jackson;

Charles Knox, who was born and reared in Newark, and is now Director of Police there. He introduced me to Shahid Jackson, whom Director Knox personally assigned to the Police Athletic Program in Newark;

Eleanor Holmes Norton, who once chaired the Equal Opportunity Commission, and is now Professor of Law at Georgetown University;

And Dr. Glenn Loury, Professor of Political Economy at the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard, and a member of the Council for a Black Economic Agenda.

Dr. Loury, as you listened to those voices, what went through your mind?

Dr. GLENN LOURY. Well, I was deeply moved. I was impressed with what I perceived to be the great strengths of character in some of the individuals. I was dismayed at what I perceived as the profundity of the problem that confronts us. I was encouraged by some of what I heard said, particularly the emphasis on values. The strength and the helping hand that I saw coming from some people indigenous to that community made me hopeful about the possibilities that we can, even at this late date, still make a significant dent in the problem. But, realistically, I was also chastened by the sense of the fact that we've got an awfully long way to go. It will be decades before we can actually turn the circumstance around.

MOYERS. What do you think, each of you, can be done to break the cycle of children born of children born of children? The third generation, as you saw in the film, of teenage mothers in one family. What can be done practically? Specifically.

Dr. ELEANOR HOLMES NORTON. This is not like any other social problem that has ever arisen in this country. This is not like unemployment. This is not like teenage delinquency. This is not even like children who can't read. This is a conundrum. This is a . . . well, I'm, I'm . . . I want to, I want to get to it. I . . . I want to describe the beast before I try to, try to get to the remedy. When you have a phenomenon as complex as to have cut to the very heart of the most basic institution in society, the family, you have got a real problem on your hands. There's no question that the mobilization—internal mobilization of the black community as if their life depended on it, because it does—is the first priority.

But we've got to understand as well what the context is. The social and moral context goes against what is happening in the United States today. Sex and crime and undisciplined forces surround the black community—do not . . . do not emanate from it.

MOYERS. Comes in through the tube every night.

NORTON. Comes in through the tube. Comes in, is piped in in a thousand different ways. So that the black community is going against, against the grain. But go against the grain it must. It's got to do that itself. But, again, in order to avoid the . . . the cynical connotation that this can be done in a self-made fashion without, for example, the jobs for the teenage boys to go to is to create the possibility of an even worse situation. One thing I think we who prescribe remedies forget, and that is that virtually none of us are truly self-made people. Somewhere you can find something that made . . . made a difference.

When you say to a boy that's fifteen—the last boy, for example. We don't know which way he's . . . he's going. If that boy is born of, let us say, a functionally illiterate mother, grows up surrounded by a pathological environment and we say, "Hey, go out there and make something of yourself," we are in effect saying, "Recreate yourself," in a way that nobody I personally know has done. At the very least, society has some responsibility.

MOYERS. This is not an easy society in which to pull oneself up by one's bootstraps.

NORTON. Not any longer.

Rev. JESSE JACKSON. My point is on this issue of sex education and sex discipline and self-respect—there must be a massive counterculture movement by no less than the people who have the ears of the masses of our young people. The first generation by about age fifteen has watched eighteen thousand hours of television. About seven hundred thousand murders. Twenty-odd thousand hours of radio. Less than eleven thousand hours of school, and less than three thousand hours of church.

So who has the . . . the maximum access to our children's minds? Mass media has more access and makes a greater impression than home, church, and school combined. That's a kind of centralization of our society where very central messages are being fed in, saying that babies making babies—the idea of a girl thinking that, that being pregnant is a beautiful profile as a sense of . . . being . . . of looking all right—that says that the decadence has hit a point where we must en masse join hands and stop finger pointing and go another way.

MOYERS. We've started . . .

Dir. CHARLES KNOX. Not only that. It's . . . it's the music, you know. Even our music. Every, every song you hear. There's no . . . no real message except more sex, more lowering of your values and morals. You can't even hear a good song. A song has a good beat. But you listen to the words; the words are outrageous.

MOYERS. Director Knox, you heard in the beginning of the broadcast some of the young women say male figures are not essential. They don't think that children need a father. Did that ring true to you, on the basis of your experience with these kids?

KNOX. I think that a family means a husband and a wife. So I'm very, very perplexed, you know, to hear females say that they don't believe that they can . . . that they need to have a man around.

NORTON. I think people say what they have to say. These women don't have any prospect of marriage. And so, they have rationalized their lives, the way they see them. We saw women who are surrounded by other women in the prior generation who also had no husbands. And this has become, therefore, intergenerational and expectable. And thus, they say what indeed turns out to be, at least for them, quite realistic.

JACKSON. That's one concern. Secondly, there are some areas in there of moral degeneracy. The young man with all of the babies without any sense of responsibility—that is moral degeneracy. And it's not genetic, it's environmental. And therefore, we have some obligation to speak of the need for moral regeneration.

LOURY. The danger is that in the process of giving this problem—which I think is a discreet and identifiable problem—too much attention, we will stigmatize the individuals involved, and we will adversely affect the way in which the rest of the American society perceives this problem. The danger is well-founded, because there are people in this society who would make use of these kinds of images in order to legitimize certain mean-spirited policy inclinations that they have, and not deal seriously with the problem.

But . . . what I want to say is that there is a discrete, identifiable inner city context, such as that described in Newark, which is repeated in many, many other communities around the country, and which is in some ways different from—not better or worse, but different in its particulars—from the situation of West Virginia or of rural Arkansas, or whatever. We could see in this film the importance of peers, the importance of what might be called the local culture, the values and the interactions between people that were happening in that particular context.

JACKSON. You know, Bill, the reason I keep trying to keep this issue broader than just the black situation: (A), for the reason that Dr. Loury said it. I remember once speaking at a Washington, DC, school about the impact of drugs and liquor, and babies making babies, and violence. And I challenged the youth in that environment to make a choice, as to whether you choose hope or the dope, and to give life a chance. And those who could really hear me with their inner ear to come forward. Six hundred . . . about three hundred came forward, having experimented with some form of drugs. And it was traumatic to see that many boys and girls come forward.

And the next day I went to Montgomery County, and then went to the Latin School just outside of Harvard there in Boston. And when white children came forward in even greater numbers, it shifted from "they got a problem" to "we got a problem."

MOYERS. I said in the beginning of the program that white families are in trouble, too. The single parent family is twice as common in the country as it was 20 years ago. But in the 1960's, when this issue of what was happening—the breakdown in the black family in particular—was raised, we all retreated from it. And as a consequence of that blacks, in meetings that I've attended and read about and listened to, are debating the issue within the black community. And the facts are there—they come from the Census Bureau, they come from the Children's Defense Fund—that the rate of birth to black teens is twice that for whites. Women head fifty percent of all black families with children under eighteen, compared to 15 percent for white children. Only 41 one percent of black children are living with both parents, compared to eighty percent of white children, and seventy percent of Hispanic children.

So, while it is true that white families are in trouble, that blacks are not the only ones who have children out of wedlock, the reality says that it's pronouced, it's exaggerated, it's concentrated, in many respects, among black families. Are you willing to admit that? Are we . . .

NORTON. I'm not willing to admit it, I think we've got to sound the alarm about it. And I think increasingly that alarm is being sounded from within the black community, and that is the important change, I think, that has occurred. There is no question that this is a phenomenon that stretches across the face of the United States. And I couldn't agree with Jesse more that we have to deal with it in its national context. At the same time, I think it is clear that it has reached proportions in our community when half of our children are being born to single women who are disproportionately poor. We see the faces of the next generation of black people. And if we keep this up, if we don't find a way to intervene—and it is so complex that intervention has got to take place on a number of levels—but if we do not find a way to intervene, we are going to see progressively greater disadvantage with each generation of black people, which is the antithesis of the American imperative.

MOYERS. There is a study at the University of Chicago that says if action is not taken, the year 2000 will—the year 2000, fourteen years from now—will see seventy percent of all black families headed by single women, and only thirty percent of black men employed. Now, that's the future you're talking about.

JACKSON. And, you know, in some sense, when we had the lack of government support mechanisms in days gone by, the only bulwark we had really was a sense of moral resistance, a sense of discipline, a sense of hope against hopelessness.

MOYERS. What's happened to that?

JACKSON. Well, in some sense, that hope has . . . many of the grapes have been turned into raisins, and a lot of despair has set in. And I remember some years ago, about 1976, you might recall that Attorney Norton and I began to talk about it in our schools, about the . . . opportunity was about to outdistance effort. And that the formula of effort to the third power plus opportunity represents a breakthrough. And somehow, we must keep this, this balance between effort and opportunity. And one senses in this film an awful lot of . . . a lot of despair. And in our analysis of it, we must not give the impression that we are defending it or trying to justify it. Because it really is unjustifable.

I go to schools, Bill, and I'll ask four to five thousand children—white, black, and brown—"How many of you know someone who is in . . . who is dead because of drugs?" Almost every hand will go up. "How many of you know someone who is in jail because of drugs?" Every hand goes up. "In your generation . . . how many know someone at this school who has taken drugs?" Hands up. "How many know someone who has brought a gun or a knife to school?" And I tell you, whether it is the suburbs of Montgomery County, or San Diego, or Newark, or Boston, it is a pervasive threat to this generation of young people. And the most fundamental question—when I ask them, "Do you believe taking drugs and babies having babies is morally wrong?"—there's a split opinion. There's no absolute ethic of moral resistance . . .

MOYERS. Mrs. Wallace said that . . .

JACKSON. . . . To taking drugs, or the baby. I say, "Do you think drugs will kill you?" "Well, we're not sure." "You can afford the baby?" "Not sure." So there is neither the moral nor the mental resistance at this point to the drug/alcohol phenomenon, or the babies making babies.

MOYERS. Now, let's take three specific issues that were raised by the film, and we'll start with welfare. Charles Murray, in his book "Losing Ground," called for scrapping the entire federal welfare and income support structure. People who can work—ADFC, Medicaid, food stamps, subsidized housing, and so on—he says this would leave the working age person with no recourse whatsoever except the job market, family members, friends, and public or private locally funded sources. Do away with it altogther, force people to look for help from their peers and from whatever sources are nearby. And you saw in the film that one woman, one mother said, "welfare makes me lazy." You heard Shahid Jackson, your compatriot, say that it's become a way of life for many men over there. What do you think about welfare as a specific factor in this problem? Director Knox?

KNOX. Well, I don't think we should do away with it. I think some people need it. I don't think that we should allow it to be a self-perpetuating institution, though. What . . . what happens is there's no steps taken to provide any incentive for people to get off of it. The result is you end up with people who are hopeless, who feel that that's the easy way out, and—particularly in my profession—it creates a real problem for me.

MOYERS. How come?

KNOX. Because I find that some of the kids that you saw in those films—guys like the slick one who walks around and he makes all these babies, and he has no sense of responsibility—is the same stickup guy that I have to arrest every day, you see. Not only does he impact on me, but he impacts on everyone else in our community. And the result is that we don't have any place to put these guys. And I'm a firm believer that some of them—some of them are unsalvageable. As much as I feel . . .

MOYERS. They're lost, like Shahid said. Some are lost . . .

KNOX. That's right. As much as I feel compassion, you know, for—for trying to salvage kids that can be salvaged, you know, by providing other alternatives for them except for this crime and stuff—I believe that some of them aren't salvageable. And I base that on twenty-one years of police experience.

MOYERS. You put your pencil down on the table when he said that. Were you disagreeing or agreeing with him? Are we going to have to give up on some of these and try for the next generation?

LOURY. Well, I hate to say we have to give up, but I agree that we are sometimes confronted with individuals whose behavior compels of us, as a pragmatic and moral matter, that they be dealt with accordingly. And people who are violently brutalizing their primarily black neighbors in the central cities of these countries, of this country, it seems to me warrant that kind of response.

MOYERS. We'll come back on that point in just one minute, after this message.

MOYERS. Is there anything that can be done that would use welfare to promote self-reliance, but not harm the children who really do need it?

NORTON. We already have some idea of what to do about the welfare system, because we have some models that are beginning to emerge—and emerge, I must say, out of state and local levels, because the federal government has abandoned any effort to reform the welfare system, even as it tries to destroy it.

We see in the Massachusetts example—the so-called E.T. Example, Education and Training—where welfare recipients sign up for education or training, and we're told this was voluntary. Except that Massachusetts found itself overwhelmed with volunteers who wanted to sign up and get off of welfare. And this program, by all accounts, has been unusually successful, and indeed it's now being copied in, in other states. New York and . . . and California have adopted versions of it.

Indeed, if your tape, if your film had any glaring fault, it was the failure to render the black women who in fact are going out here—though they do have children—and working, who are leaving their children catch as catch can with whoever in the neighborhood can take care of them rather than go on welfare. And, of course, that is the average black female single headed family. Not, not the family on welfare, although the family on welfare is . . . it certainly abounds in . . . in the most desperate parts of, of the black community.

The fact is that our welfare system really needs to be redesigned altogether. Not, not . . . not as Murray would have it—to increase not only misery, but pathology in the ghetto by under-girding female headed households with no support—but converting the welfare system itself into a work and training system. Every poll that has ever been taken of women on welfare has shown that they wanted to work, and yet the great failing of the federal government for at least the twenty-five years it has been on notice of this has been to, in fact, reform the welfare system into a . . . into an education, training, and work system.

JACKSON. Bill, you know, the first thing we really must establish—that this problem is not genetic or natural. It is social. And therefore, it is not racial in that sense. It is important to establish for the persons watching this, you know, in rural America and suburban America, that this is not genetic or racial. We'll need to dig those studies back up again. This is a social situation, and . . .

MOYERS. What is it? Is it . . . is it a cycle that just keeps beaming itself back like a mirror, and these children learn it and they repeat it?

JACKSON. An environment with limited options that retreads itself. That kind of feeds upon itself.

KNOX. The opportunities aren't that great to get out of it. Some people escape it. But most people don't, and I think that it's time for us to really, really become very serious about doing something about the ghettos.

JACKSON. That's right.

People really have four options to make a living. One is . . . the first option's a private economy. People would rather have a good paying private job. If that does not work, a good paying public or a government job. If that does not work, welfare. If that does not work, then the illicit economy or the hustle or the underground economy. So people really kind of got four options in that sense. The . . . the pain when we look at the bottom of it—when my son, sons, Jonathan and Jess, and I went to jail over the Free South Africa issue, I counseled about twenty-five young men that night and saw some of this, Dr. Holmes, face to face. Neither had a father at home. Only one had a dream. "I would like to be a policeman," he said. "But then, since I been arrested, I don't want to be a policeman, either."

So Johny . . . Johny said—and this was the son of mine that went to high school in Chicago, and was a pallbearer at twelve funerals in three years, ten, eleven, and twelfth grades—he said, "Dad, you don't understand. These boys can't lose." I said, "Johny, they've already lost. They're in jail, at fourteen and fifteen." He said, "No, Dad. See, one, if they rob a bank and get the money, they win. If they're caught, they go to jail. It's warm. They're with their friends. They can eat. Get medicine if they're sick. If they get killed, they're out of their misery. And Dad, to have a . . . a generation of young people living under these kind of conditions is dangerous. We must wake up."

When you dehumanize people to the point where they have lost their sense of conscience, their sense of moral responsibility, we . . . we cannot confine this predicament to that ghetto. That's again why everybody has vested interest in addressing it. To some of them, art is a way out. For some, athletics is a way out. To some, music is a way out. For some others, it must be trades training; it must be jobs and education as ways out.

MOYERS. You've come back occa . . . you come back often to what government should do. Mr. Knox mentioned it. You raised it in, indirectly in the welfare reforms. But that goes against the grain of so much that you have written and said. You—you said just recently dealing with behavioral problems, with community values, with attitudes and beliefs about responsibility, work, family, and schooling is not something government is well suited to do. Teaching of "oughts" properly belongs in the hands of private volunteer associations—churches, families, community groups. Did . . . will more government programs help?

LOURY. I think it depends on what those programs are. I mean, there have been White House conferences on the family or on families. There was one back in the mid-Sixties that was gutted of any substantive content because of the few who were around talking about the black family. President Carter finally managed to hold a White House conference on the families which, too, was fairly weak by virtue of the fact that the enormous number of interests—from gay rights activists to radical feminists—who had to have their imprint on the agenda was such that it was impossible to focus it on, if you will, the kinds of traditional values that we heard so many people in that film hark back to.

I . . . I think government is involved by virtue of the fact that the safety net kind of support that welfare and other programs provide is absolutely essential for a decent society, and that it has a significant impact on the lives of the people who receive the benefits. Mr. Murray, in my judgment, is wrong to call for the draconian solution of cutting all benefits to able-bodied persons. But I think he is right—and profoundly so—to call our attention to the extent to which the way in which we try to help may sometimes undermine the moral fiber of the persons, people that we're trying to assist.

JACKSON. Bill, I don't think that you should try to over-polarize our points of view. Really. Because so many . . .

MOYERS. Are they polarized?

JACKSON. Well, no. I don't think they're, not so much of whether . . . well, let me go on through. I want to . . . much of what he is saying, the sense of compassion. He is mixing with the government situation which could curb dependency syndrome, has a sense of soundness right around this table. The system itself is now beginning to hurt people by not having ways out. If there's no incentive to earn—if you make a dollar, they take a dollar—that's bad. Or, if you got a tenth grade education, get a GED, there is no incentive to go further—that's bad. So if you're locked in without earn or learn your way out, if the father does come home, you lose that which you do have. So keep him away. You get another baby, you get a little more increment. That's a terrible inducement, you see. That system must give way to a human development system that has positive presuppositions about human beings rather than negative presuppositions.

MOYERS. The issue is that we passed legislation in the sixties. We started these programs. We enhanced welfare. We did a lot of things, and the situation has gotten worse and worse. There are more . . .

NORTON. Well, obviously, welfare hasn't contributed much to that, since welfare has lost more than thirty percent in actual dollars since the early seventies. I think one's got to start talking about values. As the, the last lady said on the tape.

MOYERS. Mrs. Wallace?

NORTON. She said the drum beat's got to go out . . . look, just like they're listening to the rap, we've got to have this rap go out. But I fear that, for example, a society that says to the woman with three children, "You ought to be out here working," and she says, "I feel lazy when I'm not working"—what makes it absolutely impossible for her to work without throwing her children in the streets . . .

MOYERS. And isn't she already . . .

NORTON. . . . Creates grave cynicism in her about values. If the holier-than-thou Eleanor Norton says you ought to work, but of course Eleanor Norton has somebody to take care of her children and I don't—we've got to be very careful during this period that we make it, make it clear that we expect more from the very poor, and we're willing to do something to make that more happen. That's why I say the Massachusetts experiment . . . experiment is an important one, because what Massachusetts said was, "Look, we want you to sign up for work." It, it was . . . it was trying to break through this notion that the, the lady on the tape had, that you sit home and, and . . . and wait for a check. People signed up in such huge numbers that they had waiting lists to work. They have saved millions of dollars in Massachusetts in welfare, and what this means is that with the same money that was being put into welfare for women to set, sit home, women are now out and working with . . . with real jobs.

MOYERS. What happens to their children while they're out there?

NORTON. Well, they provided a day care at least for a year.

MOYERS. . . . Because there is the argument that you shouldn't expect welfare recipients to work, since they are doing a more valuable service by raising their children. You saw from the film it was the women who are raising the children.

KNOX. But they're not raising the children. They're not raising them.

NORTON. That is the answer.

KNOX. You know, what's happening is these, these . . . these women are young. They keep having babies. And at some point guys, like the guy that was projected in the film—he leaves. And then they have to go out and find some other guy. So the result is, in many instances, the children are neglected. And then the children are raised by their peer group in the streets. Okay. And the result is more problems for me. And more problems for you.

JACKSON. It would be important, Bill, to note that some of those programs you talked about in the Sixties did work. And they've not been defended adequately. I mean, Head Start did work. Preschool education. Breakfast and lunch programs helped to wipe out malnutrition substantially. I mean, that did work. Many of my generation otherwise could not have gone to college without a paid scholarship grant. It—it did work. If the War on Poverty Program gave many of us the first on-hands administrative jobs we ever had—it did work. So when we try to resolve the problem, we should not throw out the baby with the water. We should save that which has worked and build upon it, and just, just say it is lost because, you know . . . it was working even better, but money designed for the war on poverty went in even greater resources to the war on Vietnam.

LOURY. If I may, I would like to return to this question of values, because I think there's an aspect that hasn't, that hasn't been touched upon. We look at the inner city of Newark and many other communities—they happen to be black and urban communities. As I say, they have their own texture, their own feel, their own history, and their own culture. And many of the people there who were doing good works have stressed how important it is that we send out right messages about what appropriate behavior is.

But that's not easy to do in our society, and it's not easy to mobilize the forces of government behind it, because there are other people in our society—some of them civil libertarians, some of them radical liberationists of one sort of another—who put considerable political weight behind propositions that we ought not to say one thing is right or wrong. Try to teach in a sex education class in New York City that having a kid out of wedlock is wrong and the value clarifications people come at you out of the woodwork, telling you, "Well, no, what we should do is let kids find out for themselves; let's just help them along the way, as it were." Try to deal with kids taking guns into high schools in Detroit, where people get shot into the chest by, let's say, using metal detectors to find out whether the kids have guns on their persons when they come into a school building, and the civil libertarians are all over the Federal District Court finding that that can't be done because it violates someone's conceptions of someone's rights.

Now, don't get me wrong. I'm not an attorney. There may be very significant issues at stake here that ought to be litigated and so on. But what I'm saying is the thrust of trying to instill values in this kind of community comes into tension with some other thrusts in our society, and it's so easy for people to appropriate the poor en masse in legitimation for their particular conception of how it is that our society ought to be ordered—that this kind of experience ought to call to mind for us that maybe what's really needed to get at these hard-core poverty problems is not the same thing as the contemporary agenda of the National Organization for, of Women.

MOYERS. You've said there is . . . excuse me.

NORTON. Well, I . . . I just wanted to say that I, I . . . I can understand Dr. Loury's frustration. In a pluralist society there are gonna be many messages and counter messages. By the way, I'm less worried about the messages that come from the National Organization of Women or the ACLU that I am about the messages that come from within . . . within our own community, some of the rap music, for example, and—and not the remedial or curative type, but, but some of the type that young man himself may have made up. That's one reason why I think that the leadership on values here has to be taken by the black community. The black community has a very . . . has very deep-rooted values that have survived over years that would have eroded the values of a lesser people.

MOYERS. Well, Dr. Loury said the responsibility for the behavior of black youngsters lies squarely on the shoulders of the black community itself. That's a pretty strong statement. Why is it only a black responsibility?

LOURY. It's not only a black responsibility. But it is a black responsibility. Do you see what I mean? We are a republic. We are a nation of persons of many different ethnic groups. As a political community, we have obligations to each other, including the provision of minimal substance of those who otherwise wouldn't have it. It's not a racial issue. But we are also a pluralistic society. Culturally, sociologically, we're a many-layered complex interweaving of . . . of distinct traditions. And those traditions being distinct and being important to some and not to others also have a role to play in this problem. And so when I say, as I . . . as you quoted me saying about blacks, I'm not speaking to the public question about what we as the nation, the U.S. of A., ought to do with respect to how many dollars should be taxed and given to others. But I'm speaking to, if you will, the private question of what this particular community—and the urban central city black poor constitutes, as I say, an integral context that we can look at—I'm speaking to that, and I think that's a, that's a . . . a field of endeavor in which blacks have a preponderant advantage in conveying the messages that we want to get conveyed to these kids.

JACKSON. You know, Bill, somebody must say that babies making babies is morally wrong. Babies and young people taking drugs is morally wrong and physically destructive. And we shouldn't be equivocating and hee-hawing about that. That's very clear. It runs across lines of race and sex.

KNOX. That's right. We should be concerned about the, the . . . the number of crimes that are being committed in our communities by our own people, and . . . and we have to take a tough, a tough stance on that.

JACKSON. I want to pick up on that, because I accept his drift. I was in Detroit a few months ago. Twelve children had been shot and/or killed in the course of that week. There was a sense of outrage about it. We spoke to twenty thousand youth in Cobo Hall, with the support of Dr. Jefferson and the school system. A great response. And there was a call for metal detectors in the hallways because, just as we have them in the airports, to stop guns and knives from interfering with pilots flying the airplane, in some instances they can be used to allow teachers to . . . to fly in classrooms without being interrupted by the threat of guns and knives, or a young man with a machete running down his suit. And there was a kind of outcry. It may have had a legal technical basis. But it made no moral sense. And . . . and we may . . . can't stop in that instance the technical libertarian from arguing about the student's right to have his gun. But they could not stop us from the right to argue that having metal detectors in that context—not metal detectors for blacks and not for whites, and for girls and not for boys, and all of that—having those metal detectors to serve the purpose in that instance—equal protection under the law and all of that in making the school environment a more safe place in which to operate.

MOYERS. Well, on that note we have to finish this discussion because we're out of time. Thanks to each of you for coming here. We started small in Newark and ended up talking about a national issue. Thank you very much.

CEREMONIES FOR THE 101ST AIRBORNE DIVISION AT FT. CAMPBELL

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, the 1st session of the 99th Congress ended upon a somber note—the loss of 248 soldiers from the 101st Airborne Division in a plane crash at Gander, Newfoundland. As we in the Senate finished our last day of work before the Christmas holidays, a memorial service was held at Ft. Campbell for the men and women who gave their lives in the line of duty, for the cause of world peace.

It was an impressive ceremony. Maj. Gen. Burton Patrick, well known to the Senate as the former chief of the Army's Legislative Liaison Office and now commander of the 101st Airborne, assembled the entire division on the parade field. Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh, Jr., Gen. John A. Wickham, Jr., Chief of Staff of the Army, and General Patrick each gave as fine an address as I have been privileged to hear. I would like to share these words with my colleagues and ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The new year at Ft. Campbell began in a more positive way as the 3d Battalion, 502d Infantry started to rebuild. This is a task that demands more than merely replacing the numbers and equipment that were lost in the crash. It demands the recreation of the intangible bonds of esprit de corps, of mutual trust, of loyalty to comrade and to unit. It is a process that involves both physical training and mental healing.

A recent story in the New York Times describes how Ft. Campbell has begun to close its wounds and I ask that it, too, be reprinted in the RECORD. I am confident that, under General Patrick's stewardship, morale will soon be restored and the community will once again look forward to the future.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORIAL CEREMONIES FOR 101st DIVISION

(December 20, 1985, Fort Campbell)

MAJOR GENERAL BURTON PATRICK COMMANDER, 101ST AIRBORNE DIVISION (AIR ASSAULT)

General PATRICK. Fellow soldiers and members of the Combat Division assembled in this center, we have come together on this field of honor, albeit bitter cold, to pay our last respects to your destiny. It is only fitting that we have snow today. This Division seems to unite under these conditions as they did 41 years ago at Bastogne when the battle raged there.

As your Commander, it is my solemn duty to call you here under these tragic and difficult circumstances. I wish with all my heart that it could be otherwise. But I know that each of you feel the same way.

The airplane tragedy that has taken the lives of our fellow soldiers has cast a dark cloud over Fort Campbell and the homes of every family throughout the land. We have suffered a loss of indescribable proportions, a loss that cuts across the entire Division, and the Nation and its territories.

Our hearts go out to the families and loved ones of those brave soliders who lost their lives in Newfoundland flying on their way home from peacekeeping duties in the Sinai, a mission that they had done so efficiently, effectively, and quietly that the general public did not even realize that they were there.

Our courageous peacekeepers have departed our midst suddenly, and they have ascended to heights where even eagles cannot fly. They will be missed in so many ways, and their service and sacrifice like our Silent Eagles of the past will remain in our memories forever.

The single and very bright ray of sunshine that had made its way through our black cloud occurred yesterday morning when the remainder of our Task Force touched down safely at Campbell Army Air Field. Heavy hearts were lifted somewhat then as those of us who were there know so well. Welcome Home Task Force 3502. A job well done. It is with heavy hearts that we welcome you home.

Each of you know the father of Fort Campbell and the Screaming Eagles is strong. And the cohesion and comradeship of our people is like steel wire, it runs deep. It is with these words that I tell you that we must now look to the future and the promise of happier days ahead.

I know that these past eight days have been trying and hectic, and that you have to had sufficient time to regroup and mourn your dead. I promise you that time. As I have said previously, we will lick our wounds, help those families in grief, reconstitute our forces, and continue the mission. I will need your total support as always, as will those families personally affected by tragedy.

Speaking of families, I have just received this message from Mr. and Mrs. Estel Banks, parents of Bob Banks from Headquarters Company 3502. And I quote: "While we cannot be at Fort Campbell we are with you in mind, heart, and spirit. We grieve with and for you. In our mutual sorrow, we remember our son and your loss, and their brave courageous service to the peace in our world. Be strong, be proud. We pray for you, please pray for us."

I think that this expresses the true feelings of all families who have lost sons and daughters today all across this country. I know that they express ours.

HONORABLE JOHN O. MARSH, JR., SECRETARY OF THE ARMY

Secretary MARSH. To all of those in sorrow, members of Congress, and our foreign guests, and above all to those soldiers of Fort Campbell and the great 101st Airborne Division, this is a sad time.

My wife and I have come here because our hearts go out with you, to the families of those soldiers that we memorialize today. Words may fail, but the Army and this great Division will honor and will long remember those it has lost.

We often take for granted the quiet unsung duties of others who perform for us. Our comfort, our security, these are the gifts of time and sacrifice of those we often do not know as we are swept along in the current of our own little world. And then tragedy strikes, and it shocks us into awareness.

A nation mourns the men and women, soldiers of the 101st Airborne Division of Fort Campbell who gave their lives in the line of duty. They were the peacemakers. For them, we grieve. Yet the grief that we bear cannot measure to the anguish of the hearts and souls of those who knew them best, who loved them most, their families, their friends, their comrades-in-arms.

The poet said, "No man is an island unto himself/Any man's death diminished me." Therefore, it is our prayer that in some way through the sadness that we share that it might ease the heaviness of your hearts.

These soldiers, these magnificent Americans, they died in service to their country. They died serving a noble cause, a cause rooted in the value of a nation dedicated to liberty, to justice, to bring peace to a violent and troubled world. The defense of these values, that was their mission. It took them to the depth of Sinai, a place of troubled sands and rugged mountains.

There in an isolated outpost for more than a half a year, they were the peacekeepers. Seven battalions of the American Army have been there before them, and another has come after them. They are all part of a multinational force serving the same cause. Today in support of our country's commitment for a better world, American soldiers are on duty at the DMZ in Korea, at Checkpoint Charlie in West Berlin, and in many, many other places far from home. They, too, like you, are peacekeepers.

To those of you who wear the patch of this great 101st Division, the most lasting tribute that you can pay to those who are lost is to continue your superb performance of duty, and this I know that you will do.

Those we honor were coming home from the cradle of our faith, the Sinai, the land of the Exodus and the Ten Commandments where values that they sought to protect where formed. Christmas is a spiritual time. We reflect on life's meaning. It is a moment that brings out the best that is in us. We want a better world and values to take on new meaning.

We find strength in faith, in hope, and love. We reach out to others. We have a sense of gratitude to our country. And we are thankful to those like you who bear arms to keep us free. This yuletide, this Christmas, let us honor these magnificent soldiers that we have lost. And from the bottom of our hearts, we thank them, and those who they have left with us for what they did for their country, for what they did for peace on earth, for what they did for goodwill to men, for what they did for all of us.

In their memory with compassion and resolution, let us meet the days ahead.

GENERAL JOHN A. WICKHAM, JR. CHIEF OF STAFF OF THE ARMY

General WICKHAM. Members of Congress, members of the Diplomatic Corps that are here, and friends and loved ones of this great tradition and great Post, and magnificent soldiers of Fort Campbell, Mrs. Wickham and I have returned home here to share in the sorrow and sadness of this moment. We mourn those magnificent soldiers who have perished in the line of duty in the lonely outpost in the Sinai carrying out its responsibility to maintain peace in the region. They truly are peacekeepers and peacemakers.

You have lost your loved ones and comrades. I know how you feel. I was with this Division as Commander, and I knew many of these wonderful men. As Chief of Staff, I saw them in the field at Fort Erwin, and then I visited the Sinai and saw another battalion of this great Division.

So I have lost just as much as you have. And I understand the depth of your hurt. But as your Commander said, our task now is to build anew the great power of this Division that keeps the legacy of the past, World War II and Vietnam, and peacetime periods in between.

The memory of the Army is love. We love our soldiers and we love our families. The Congress has just passed some additional legislation that helps the families even further. The support mechanism that has worked on this Post to deal with the realities of the family have been magnificent. And we shall continue, the Army and this Post, the support of our families, and particularly those loved ones who are dealing with the reality of a loss here.

The last thought that I leave with you is a question that I am sure that many have asked. Why these young people in the flower of their youth, why were they taken from us in such a tragic way? Words can never answer that question entirely. But let me add a thought that might be helpful in comfort to all of you young men here in front of us who were so close to those beloved soldiers.

Almost twenty years ago in a combat incident in Vietnam, I survived with slight wounds while dear friends were killed around me. And I asked that question, why should these younger people who have families larger than mine perish, and I was given a chance?

And the only comfort that I have been able to take out of that question has been the belief that time was given in the way of a gift. The gift of additional time, to do what? To glorify those who have perished, and to glorify our Maker, who has given us the time to live longer.

That is the answer that has been helpful to me, the gift of additional time to do good work. I think that all of us can find some solace in that. As you rebuild anew this great Division, as you make your time count, the gift that has been given to you, these young people directly in front of us who did survive, and all of you on this great Post who knew of these folks or wonder about the incident.

Make use of the gift of additional time to glorify your Maker who has given you the gift and talent to use. God bless all of you. Our hearts reach out to every soul here, and particularly to the families who are filled with deep sorrow. God bless all of you.

ARMY REPLACING MEN KILLED IN CRASH

(By Richard Halloran)

FORT CAMPBELL, KY.—The infantry battalion of the 101st Airborne Division that lost nearly a third of its soldiers in an airplane crash in Newfoundland has begun to rebuild.

The new commander, Lieut. Col. Harry E. Rothmann, called the 3d Battalion, 502d Infantry, together in early January to tell them about plans for the next six months. "We are all soldiers," the colonel said, "and we know what we have to do."

In a brief ceremony to symbolize the step into the new year, the colonel read a letter from a Marine officer who had lost colleagues in the terrorist attack in Lebanon in 1983, formally inducted two new company commanders, then led the battalion on a four-mile run.

The battalion had been the main element of the American contingent in an international peacekeeping force in the Sinai and was on the way home when a chartered airliner crashed shortly after taking off from Gander Dec. 12, killing all 256 people aboard.

In soldiers killed, the battalion suffered a catastrophic loss. In combat, casualties of 10 to 15 percent are considered heavy. All together, the battalion lost 187 officers and soldiers, almost a third of the total.

The commander, seven staff officers, two company commanders, the chaplain and the sergeant major, the senior noncommissioned officer, died in the crash. Company A was nearly wiped out, as was the anti-tank platoon of Company D.

A battalion is the basic fighting unit of the Army and Marine Corps. In the 101st, a helicopter assault division, an infantry battalion comprises 40 officers and 650 enlisted men organized into a headquarters, three rifle companies and a weapons company with mortars and anti-tank missiles.

But an infantry battalion depends more on esprit and discipline than on numbers and weapons to become an effective combat force. Soldiers are motivated, said Colonel Rothmann, "by the intangible bonds of trust, loyalty and confidence."

To reconstitute the battalion, Colonel Rothmann reassigned officers and sergeants within the battalion, received others from the brigade of which the battalion is one of three, and was given several from the other two brigades in the division.

He has reassigned eight squads of 9 to 11 soldiers, the smallest units, from other companies to rebuild Company A. That way, Colonel Rothmann said, "we have a battalion that is associated with success in the Sinai."

The brigade commander, Col. John P. Herrling, who is supervising the rebuilding, emphasized the common experience of the Sinai mission as a bond. "The whole thing," he said, "is to try to maintain the cohesion of the unit."

ATTENTION TO MORALE

While the battalion is being retrained, Colonel Herrling said, equal attention will be given to morale. "You've got to heal the spirit as well as the physical wound," he said. "It's going to take a while to get over that loss."

A new chaplain has been named and a psychologist has been assigned to the battalion; both will look for signs of depression or other problems.

Large numbers of rifles, anti-tank weapons and communication gear were lost in the crash, but replacing those is among the least of the battalion's problems. Colonel Herrling said most of the weapons would be replaced by the end of February.

Colonel Rothmann, who was the brigade's executive officer before being named battalion commander the day after the crash, held meetings with all leaders in the battalion, down to the squad level, to get ideas for retraining.

"We'll start from the basics," the colonel said, "just as if we were starting a football season. We'll go through the drills and learn the plays again."

In February, the battalion will go to the field for platoon-level exercises. Troops will be trained in air assault tactics and leaders will take part in a command-post exercise to train them in making tactical decisions.

EMPHASIS WAS ON SAFETY

In March, the battalion will stay in garrison to serve guard duty, send soldiers to specialized schools like the noncommissioned officers academy and communications school, and work on shortcomings spotted in the field.

In April, Company A will go to amphibious warfare school to train on its own and to build company cohesion. The battalion will also be given its first tactical evaluation to see if it is ready for combat.

In May, part of the battalion is scheduled to train with forces from other services in a joint exercise while one company will go to Fort Irwin, Calif., to act as the adversary for other battalions training there.

A grim irony, Colonel Herrling said, was that the 3d Battalion, 502d Infantry, had emphasized safety in its six-month tour in the Sinai. Earlier units had lost soldiers in accidents or drowning, but the worst the battalion had suffered until the crash was a broken leg.

In his first formation with the battalion, Colonel Rothmann said he hoped to set a tone. For that reason, he read to the soldiers the letter from the Marine officer whose battalion was hit by a terrorist attack in Beirut, saying that both battalions "lost people who were performing their duties in the service of the nation."

The marine's letter included a check for $205 his troops had chipped in for survivors of the soldiers. Letters from all over the country, Colonel Rothmann told the battalion, "reflected recognition from the people of this country that we are their soldiers."

DEATH OF SEVEN SHUTTLE ASTRONAUTS

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, the passage of 24 hours following the tragic death of the seven shuttle astronauts aboard Challenger has not served to lessen in any way the shock and sorrow we all feel. It is a national tragedy that touches all of us deeply and permanently as human beings.

Our compassion and concern go out unreservedly to the sorrowing families of all of those brave men and women aboard the shuttle. If there was anything any of us as individuals could do to help them bear the terrible burden they must carry, we would all do it in an instant.

While there is little most of us can do as individuals, there is much we can do as fellow Americans and as legislators to keep faith with them and their ultimate sacrifice. We can work to insure that such a tragedy does not repeat itself as we push on with the programs in space to which they were brave pioneers and are now martyrs.

There is no question that we must continue to reach out toward space with further manned flights. The spirit of man requires it, and the seven astronauts would have wanted it. As the President said in his eloquent statement yesterday, "We'll continue our quest in space. There will be more shuttle crews and, yes, more volunteers, more civilians, more teachers in space. Nothing ends here. Our hopes and our journeys continue."

Our challenge, as the journeys continue, is to become ever more vigilant, ever more careful, that human life, which is the program's most precious ingredient, is protected to the greatest possible extent.

While we sorrow in this terrible loss, we are at the same time ennobled by the intense sacrifice of the seven astronauts. Let us carry on in the same spirit of courage which they showed us all.

HUMAN RIGHTS IN NICARAGUA

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, during the past several years, I have tried to bring the human rights situation in Nicaragua to the attention of the Members of both Houses of Congress. During the last years of the Somoza regime, the independent Permanent Commission for Human Rights [CPDH] of Nicaragua served as the primary clearinghouse for reports of human rights violations in that troubled country. From 1977 until 1979, Somoza's regime subjected CPDH's courageous workers to harassment, imprisonment, and physical attack.

With the defeat of Somoza in 1979, some Sandinistas, including Interior Minister Tomas Borge, suggested that there would be no further need for the CPDH or any other human rights organization as there would be no further abuses of individual rights in Nicaragua. Since 1981, the relationship between the CPDH and the Sandinista regime has steadily worsened as human rights abuses have escalated. CPDH attorneys have been arrested and threatened, its files have been ransacked and copied on numerous occasions by state security officers, and various unsuccessful efforts have been made to prevent the international dissemination of CPDH findings.

The most serious recent attacks against the CPDH occurred in conjunction with the imposition of a broadened state of emergency by the Sandinistas on October 15. The practical effect of the state of emergency was to serve notice that opposition would no longer be tolerated by the Sandinista regime. Lino Hernandez, the national coordinator of the CPDH, was called into the Interior Ministry for interrogation on November 14 by Capt. Nelba Blandon, that ministry's chief of censorship. Mr. Hernandez was ordered to submit all CPDH documents to the Government for prior censorship. Numerous human rights organizations, including the International League for Human Rights, Amnesty International, and Americas Watch, have sharply criticized the Sandinista government for this move toward totalitarianism and have supported the CPDH's continued independence.

The Nicaraguan Catholic Church remained a primary target for the Sandinista regime's attacks throughout the fall of 1985. The increased state pressures on the church were felt at all levels of Nicaraguan society. In response, the church established a Commission for Justice and Peace in October under the auspices of Cardinal Miguel Obando y Bravo. A leading Nicaraguan human rights specialist, Manta Patrica Baltodano, was appointed as the commission's director. The commission was located within the offices of the Archdiocese's social services agency in Managua. These offices were occupied by Sandinista state security agents on October 15 and the commission's files and plans were confiscated. Obviously, these actions against the CPDH and the Commission for Justice and Peace have been a severe setback for the cause of human rights in Nicaragua.

We in Congress have an obligation to speak out in support of these brave individuals who monitor human rights violations and to circulate their findings as widely as possible. I have just obtained the most recent reports of the CPDH, which have been published for the months of September through November of 1985. While it is clear that the Sandinista regime has tried to prevent the continued operation of the CPDH, Mr. Hernandez and his colleagues have been able to provide at least a partial portrait of the process of repression in Nicaragua. The most recent document is a letter from Mr. Hernandez to Interior Minister Borge regarding the arrest and detention of a prominent Nicaraguan labor leader, Jose Altamirano Rojas, on December 14.

The last of the documents which I shall include is a letter from Interior Minister Borge to one of my constituents, Episcopal Bishop Robert Anderson. The letter refers to three human rights cases with which I have been involved since last summer. One of these individuals was Jose Soza Jarquin, a driver for the CPDH, who was imprisoned at El Chipote for 2 months because of his place of employment. Mr. Soza was released by President Ortega and Interior Minister Borge on August 19 in compliance with the requests of Congressmen BUDDY MACKAY and MIKE ANDREWS, who were visiting Managua at that time. In this letter, however, Minister Borge denies any knowledge of Mr. Soza despite his close involvement in the case.

Luis Mora Sanchez is a journalist and a member of the Nicaraguan Social Democratic Party, while Mauricio Paul Membreno Gaitan is an activist within the youth wing of the Social Democratic Party. Both men were arrested on June 15 in connection with a demonstration in support of Cardinal Obando on the previous day. They were held without charge in El Chipote political prison until July 31 and brought before a special revolutionary tribunal [TPA]. At this TPA hearing, they were read two pages of charges which they were asked to sign. Both Mora and Membreno Gaitan claimed that they were refused food for about 20 days and that they were frequently bound during captivity. Mora states further that his interrogator, Omar Cabezas, told him, "We've had enough of you people. We're going to make you disappear." Cabezas is the director of Political Affairs for the Ministry of Internal Affairs as well as a noted writer and intellectual of the revolution. Mora and Membreno were returned to El Chipote after their appearance before the TPA and remain in detention. Their sentences cannot be appealed.

In closing, I would strongly urge my colleagues to read Minister Borge's letter carefully. It is, without a doubt, one of the more cynical and disingenuous documents that I have ever received. Despite his claims to the contrary, it is increasingly clear that political and religious repression is the order of the day in Managua. As the Sandinista regime consolidates itself, we should not forget the efforts of the true revolutionaries—the Nicaraguan democrats—who continue to stand for the original goals of the Nicaraguan revolution against those who have betrayed it for personal gain and power.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the CPDH reports for September through November as well as letters from Lino Hernandez and Tomas Borge be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MINISTERIO DEL INTERIOR,
Managua, Free Nicaragua,
December 7, 1985.

Right Rev. ROBERT M. ANDERSON,
Bishop Episcopal Diocesis of Minnesota, United States.

DEAR BISHOP ANDERSON: I have recently received your letter requesting information, in the interest of Senator Dave Durenberger, Chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee. I wish to state that what you expressed in your letter regarding social justice, human rights, pardon, and abolishment of capital punishment in our Free Nicaragua, is nothing more than a part of the fundamentally humanistic project undertaken by our Revolution, that rescued the respect and the elemental values of the individual, that unfortunately, continue to be trampled by outside forces that are financing the aggression that our people is suffering.

Allow me to express my gratitude for your positive attitude toward our people, and I hope that the information on my country that you will convey to Senator Durenberger and to your people will in some way help to end the aggressiveness of certain sectors of the government and will create consciousness that all we want in Nicaragua is Peace and mutually respectful relationships with your Government.

I will provide you detailed information related to the alleged Human Rights abuses of the following individuals: Mauricio Paul Membreño Gaitán, Luis Manuel Mora Sánchez, and José Soza Jarquín.

The young man Membreño Gaitán, whose name according to our records is Mauricio Raul, was detained on November 1, 1984 because of violating our standing Law of Military Service, when he tried to leave the country by illegal means. During the investigative process of his case, his illegal activities were fully approved, and after being submitted to a legal process, he was set free on March 9, 1985. Currently, he is to the order of the competent Court of Law accused of aggression and attacks to the police authorities of our country.

Luis Mora Sánchez: He was involved in illegal activities since 1982 as a member of the Counter-Revolutionary Organization known as A.R.D.E., and was directly involved in recruiting youngsters and in handling of large amounts of economical resources for the realization of subversive actions against Economic and Military objectives in our country. This individual was submitted to a legal process before the due judicial authorities, and was condemned in 1984 to a 9 year prison term, having been set free, by generosity of the Revolution, through and indult on September 8, 1984. Currently, this citizen is being processed in the Judicial Courts for public aggression to the police authorities.

I can not give you any information in relation to Jose Soza Jarquín, due to the fact that I do not have any. Nevertheless, with the intention of clarifying any confusion that might exist, I must advise you that if your question was intended for Jose Joaquín Sánchez Soza, he was set free by resolution of the Judicial Court on July 12, 1985.

I hope, Bishop Anderson, to have satisfied your interest, and I want to ratify that in the new Nicaragua, repression against any person on account of his or her political or religious creed has been abolished forever. It is my deep understanding that from your position as a Religious Leader you have played, and will continue playing, a very important role in the handling of information regarding the reality that our Sandinista Popular Revolution is living through.

Fraternally,

TOMAS BORGE.

CPDH OF NICARAGUA PERMANENT COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS OF NICARAGUA

SEPTEMBER 1985 REPORT

A total of 91 reports of the most different aspects of violations of human rights was filed in September 1985 with the CPDH of Nicaragua offices.

Among these reports is a total of 60 arrests, 48 of them corresponding to persons detained by the "State Security" forces, most of them being peasants accused of collaborating with insurgent groups or without any apparent cause. Ten cases refer to common crimes which have some relation to a violation of human rights, such as sick prisoners, or those arbitrarily sentenced by the police; two are cases of soldiers in the Sandinista Army accused of desertion and eight are cases of former members of the National Guard who, after six years in prison, are ill.

Six cases of missing persons were reported after they had been arrested or where there are strong indications and evidence that they had been arrested. In addition, within this framework, five persons who had been considered missing were found and had been or were in the hands of State Security; the time that these persons remained "missing" varies between two and 17 months of total solitary confinement.

Six cases of torture and abuse of prisoners were reported in September, many of these cases revealing true acts of savagery against prisoners, more and more open, especially in the State Security jails.

Three cases of a violation of the freedom of religion or of persecution for religious reasons were reported during the month with which we are concerned; these cases vary from the prohibition of broadcasts of masses celebrated by the President of the Episcopal Conference of Nicaragua, Cardinal Miguel Obando Bravo, to threats of persons working on the Social Advancement Commission of the Catholic Church.

Cases of persecution of members of independent unions were also reported, especially against the Confederation of Union Unification (CUS) and the Confederation of Workers of Nicaragua (CTN).

In the following pages we present a small summary of the principal cases reported in September 1985.

UNEXPLAINED DEATH

Alejandro Montealto Ramos, 54 years of age, married, farmer, residing in the District of La Orilla, jurisdiction of Nandaime, in the Department of Granada. He was detained on March 8 of this year by six members of State Security who came to his house to tell him that he had to make some statements, taking him to this force's jails in Jinotepe, Department of Carazo, where he remained incommunicado for 20 days, after which they allowed his wife to visit him.

He was later transferred to the jails known as Zona Franca, in Managua, and put under the orders of the Court of Exception which operates in Managua.

On September 3, when his wife Auxiliadora Apias Marquez was in Zona Franca to visit a son of the two of them who is also in those jails, he told her that his father—Alejandro Montealto Ramos had died inside of the prison on August 28 and that he wondered why they still had not handed over the body to her.

Finally after several requests, the body was handed over to her, and she was told that he had died from a heart attack. At the time of death, six months after his detention, the court of exception which was trying him had not pronounced a verdict on his innocence or guilt.

Finally, Mrs. Arias Marquez has stated that in spite of the problems associated with his age, which were aggravated by his stay in jail, Mr. Montealto Ramos had never received appropriate medical treatment.

TORTURE

Marcelino Rayo Morales, 26 years of age, single, fisherman, and with residence in the port of Corinto, in the Department of Chinandega. He was detained on May 22, 1984 in the city of Somoto, being transferred to the jails of State Security of Esteli, where he remained two days and was later moved to the State Security jails of Leon, known as "Quinta ya," where he spent five months completely incommunicado. His family was told that he was not being held in that center.

Later he was moved to the jails known as El Chipote, in Managua, where he remained for nine months, incommunicado, in what he calls a tunnel; a great part of this time he was blindfolded and he was subjected to cruel physical torture, consisting of blows to his entire body; His cheekbones still have two black marks as a result of blows with the heels of military boots, and on his right foot he has a scar as a result of a kick. As his mother states, when she saw him the first time, more than 15 months after he had been detained, his face was practically disfigured.

He is currently in the jail known as Zona Franca and has problems with his sight and pains in the ribs; he has told his mother that his ribs had been fractured when he was tortured and that he never received medical treatment.

The CPDH had this case reported to it at the end of 1983 as a kidnaping by insurgent groups and had made efforts on his behalf before various groups based in Honduras. In addition, beginning in 1984 we had reports that he was being detained in Nicaragua and efforts were made with the corresponding authorities, but his detention was always denied.

MISSING

Mario Cortes Bravo, 22, single, ship captain and Jose Mendoza Chavarria, 24, single, nautical mechanic, both of the domicile of the port of Corinto, in the Department of Chinandega, and inducted into the Sandinista Armed Forces in the Coast Guard; they were detained on August 1 of this year, when they were supposedly trying to cross into Honduras, deserting the Army.

According to reports provided by Mario Cortez' father, both were taken to the jails of Somotillo and from there it is not known where they were transferred. Both had been in Cuba, receiving training in their respective areas of work.

The CPDH has requested reports on this case from the Ministry of the Interior of Region II (Leon) without having obtained any reply on the matter.

FOUND

Jose Antonio Blandon Gutierrez, 18 years of age, driver, married, Alfredo Amador Altamirano, 29, laborer, married, Ariel Amador Altamirano, 22, driver, single, all from Jinotega, were arrested by State Security on June 18 of this year, in the market of the city of Jinotega.

Their families looked for them in the jails of Jinotega, Matagalpa, and Managua, their detention being denied in all of them, so that they reported the case to the CPDH, saying that they were missing. Finally in the middle of August of this year the authorities of the Ministry of the Interior of Matagalpa agreed that they were in the jail known as Las Tejas, located approximately 5 kilometers from the city of Matagalpa. Finally, they were moved to the jails known as Zona Franca, in Managua, were they were able to receive a visit on September 4 of this year.

They told their families that for 51 days they had been totally incommunicado in the State Security jails of Matagalpa, where they had been tortured, subjected to blows by investigators who wore hoods to cover their faces, they were held in completely dark cells, in which they were only allowed to stand; later they were transferred to other cells where they were allowed to lie on the floor and they were kept for several days without eating or drinking water; later they would receive one glass of water a day for two prisoners.

They tried to force one of the prisoners to write a letter to his wife in which he would tell her not to worry, that he was fine and that he had joined the "contras."

In addition, one of the prisoners was able to communicate through a hole in the wall of the cell with another prisoner named Miguel Angel Castro Cruz, who has been reported as missing to CPDH, after having been taken on May 25 of this year and whose detention is still being denied by members of State Security. Evidently this prisoner (Miguel Angel) is sick since his voice can almost not be heard.

UNION MEMBERS

Noel Efrain Alvarado Flores, 24, married, fisherman and residing in Paso Caballos, jurisdiction of the port of Corinto, in the Department of Chinandega, who is a member of the Fishermen's Union of Paso Caballos, affiliated with CUS. He reported to CPDH that on August 28 of this year, when he was returning from fishing, he was apprehended by some soldiers who were riding in a military vehicle, WAS brand, and which had on its doors the acronym CIS (Military Counterintelligence); he was handcuffed and forced to get into the vehicle that took them to the jails of the Corinto police department, where he was subjected to interrogations for two days, after which he was released. During the questioning on his union activities, they also made accusations against CUS, which they indicated was a counterrevolutionary organization and that if he continued his affiliation with it he would end up in jail.

Since then he has been harassed by State Security members for not having abandoning his union activity.

RELIGIOUS

Catholic Radio: Official broadcasting station of the Nicaraguan Catholic Church, on September 12 of this year it received the order from the Office of Mass Media, through a telephone call, to not broadcast live the Holy Mass that would be celebrated by Cardinal Miguel Obando Bravo, in the city of Boaco. In the afternoon of the same day, two officials of the Ministry of the Interior, heavily armed, appeared at the radio station and proceeded to cut off a delayed and summarized broadcast that was being given of the mass.

All of this, while the foreign delegations that visit the country are told that in Nicaragua the broadcasting of mass is not prohibited, nor is the freedom of worship hindered.

MILITARY SERVICE

Dionisio Jose Narvaez Espinoza and Manuel de Jesus Narvaez Guerrero, 22 and 18 years old, respectively. They were detained by members of State Security, at their home of residence in the Ciudad Sandino part of this capital on July 14 of this year, being investigated for supposedly carrying out "counterrevolutionary activities," remaining detained until September 9, the date on which they were taken to the Health Center of Ciudad Sandino and at midnight of that day they were sent to provide Military Service at a base located in the mountains of the northern area of the country.

Before releasing them on the condition that they provide military service, they were forced to sign an "oath" in which they stated that they were going to combat on the basis of their own and spontaneous will.

CPDH had been making efforts for these prisoners to receive medical treatment, since the reports that their families had given us had said that they were both physically and mentally ill as a result of the conditions in jail in El Chipote.

SPECIAL

Socorro Gutierrez Mejia, 35 years of age, married, domestic, and residing in Rio San Juan. On June 23 of this year she was at her house of residence in the El Tigre District, jurisdiction of San Miguelito, in the Department of San Juan, when several soldiers of the Sandinista Armed Forces appeared; they proceeded to surround the house and forced her to cook for them a pig that she owned. At night they forced her to accompany them, taking her detained to the port of San Miguelito, in the company of her children, Juan Carlos, 8, and Daniel, 10, who were left helpless when they reached that port, being picked up by charitable persons who took them to the house of some relatives in Managua.

Mrs. Gutierrez was taken from San Miguelito to the State Security base in San Carlos, in the same department where, she remained for a month, and she is currently in the State Security jails in Juigalpa, without it being known what the charges are against her, nor when she will be taken before a competent court.

She is the mother of five children who are completely helpless since the father of the children had abandoned her.

Note: The reports presented to this office are true according to our knowledge and understanding and are supported by reports and testimonies properly signed. CPDH does not claim to justify or defend the persons who have committed crimes; however, it believes that all Nicaraguans have the right to minimum legal guarantees so that true justice will be done.

Managua, October 23, 1985

CPDH: COMMISSION ON HUMAN RIGHTS OF NICARAGUA OCTOBER 1985 REPORT

On October 15, 1985, the government of the Sandinista Front once again imposed a State of National Emergency, by means of a decree through which the principal rights and guarantees of Nicaraguans were suspended, among others the rights to: individual freedom and personal safety; the appeal of habeus corpus; due process; freedom of movement and residence; the principle of legality; not to have interference in one's private life, his communication or correspondence, his domicile, honor or private documents; freedom of expression and information; peaceful assembly and public expression; free association; to found organizations and associations, both trade unions and professional ones; to found labor unions and to have them belong to international organizations; to strike and file an appeal for protection.

With the present one, there have been four cases in which the government has issued emergency laws, and of the six years of the Sandinista government, the people have seen their rights legally suspended totally or partially for almost five years. CPDH has written to President Daniel Ortega to express to him its consternation because of this new suspension of guarantees and has made him see that the best defense of any government is to respect the rights of its citizens, not to confiscate them. In addition, we have sent an explanation to the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, in which it is reported that the government is violating the American Convention on Human Rights (Pact of San Jose), since in addition to applying the suspension of citizens' rights for an excessive time, it has suspended the minimum legal guarantees that make effective the rights still in force.

In addition to suspending the rights of citizens, it has begun to implement a Reserve Military Service, through which citizens between the ages of 25 and 40 will have to register, train, and if "selected," serve.

Since October 15, the grave situation of human rights in Nicaragua has deteriorated drastically, and one of the main institutions that has been affected by the government actions has been the Catholic Church of Nicaragua. On October 15 before the issuance of the decree suspending guarantees, the offices of the Social Advancement Commission of the Archdiocese (COPROSA), part of the Archiepiscopal Curia of Managua, were taken over militarily, the employees were removed from the facilities, and Cardinal Obando Bravo was not allowed access to them, the spokesman of the Archiepiscopal Curia, Mons. Bismarck Carballo, was removed by violent pushing upon the direct orders of the national head of State Security. So far the offices continue to be under military control.

National leaders of different political and union organizations have been taken to State Security offices, where they have been detained for a short time and threatened, among others: Dr. Eduardo Rivas Gasteazoro, President of the Nicaraguan Democratic Coordinator (CDN), Luis Rivas Leiva, Secretary General of the Social Democratic Party, Erick Ramirez, President of the Social Christian Party, Enrique Meneses Pena, of the Independent Liberal Party. The offices of the CTN were entered, accounting documents were removed, and three of its main leaders were also taken to the jails of El Chipote, where they spent several hours. On the other hand, the government has announced the detention of more than a hundred peasants in the northern region, accusing them of being "couriers" for the Contras and they have announced that they will be tried in the court of exception in Managua.

During October a total of 78 reports were filed with the CPDH of Nicaragua, dealing with a variety of aspects—only three weeks were worked—among them 39 detentions by the members of the General Administration of State Security (SGSB) of persons accused of "collaborating" with the contras were reported, as well as 11 cases of former members of the National Guard who are ill and not receiving medical treatment; these prisoners for the most part are in a deplorable physical condition after six years of extremely precarious conditions in the jail known as Carcel Modelo (Model Jail); more than a thousand prisoners in this jail have not received visits since June of this year. In that jail there are approximately 3,000 prisoners.

Below we present details of the principal reports received in October 1985.

DEATH

Victor Castro Ubeda, adult, married, laborer, residing at the Hacienda Santa Gertrudis, jurisdiction of Pueblo Nuevo, in the Department of Jinotega. He was detained by members of a patrol composed of 25 soldiers who appeared at said hacienda on September 9 of this year; in addition to him, they detained his brother Bayardo Castro Ubeda and work companions Francisco Velasquez Aragon, Gabriel Altamirano and Rudy Lopez Lopez. Their family members were advised that they would be taken to a military base located in Asturias, in the same department. When family members appeared the following day, they were informed that Victor Castro Ubeda had fled when he was being transferred and that the most likely was that he had "gone with the Contras."

A soldier of the patrol named Pastor Mendiola stated to the family that Victor Castro Ubeda had been killed when he tried to escape, he warned them that he was telling them that so that they would not continue looking for him but that if they told anyone the family would also be killed. Maria Ignacia Rugama Flores, partner in life of Victor Castro, sought him along with other workers of the hacienda, and on Friday, September 13 they found his body on the land of a neighboring hacienda; he was buried in a hole barely a meter deep and covered with branches and rotten sticks; the body was wrapped up in an olive green cloak and had his feet tied by means of his thumbs and also both wrists with shoe laces, his face was distorted as if he had been beaten fiercely, his teeth pulled out, his nose cut, the fingers and the right arm crushed, he had a wound in his stomach, the genitals destroyed, and weapons jabs were seen on his body. Apparently he had no wound from a firearm. The body was buried in Pueblo Nuevo on September 14.

The other persons detained were taken to State Security jails known as Las Tejas, in the city of Matagalpa and so far family members do not know the charges against them. Both they and the one murdered led a peaceful public life as workers on the Santa Gertrudis hacienda.

CPDH has in its possession a statement given before a Public Notary of the city of Jinotega, signed by 68 workers of Santa Gertrudis hacienda, in which the above is confirmed. These persons received promises from the local authorities to investigate the events, which so far has not been done.

TORTURE AND ABUSE OF PRISONERS

Julio Ramon Montes, President of the Social Christian Party in the Department of Leon, Eduardo Paredes, Secretary of the Social Christian Revolutionary Youth of the Department of Chinandega, and the doctor Manuel Adan Rugama, of Managua, have been being subjected to discriminatory treatment, together with other political prisoners in the penal center known as Zona Franca. They are under "disciplinary sanctions" for being the supposed organizers of a hunger strike, demanding better food and treatment in keeping with the human dignity of prisoners.

The family visits of these prisoners have been limited, and they have reduced to the minimum the time in the sun, they are being threatened with transfer to a jail farther from Managua, in order to make visitations more difficult.

Dr. Manuel Adan Rugama, in spite of having heart problems, has not received appropriate medical treatment and the authorities have claimed that he "does not want" to receive medical treatment, or to be transferred to a clinic.

He has told his family that after his family or the International Red Cross Committee take him food and personal hygiene articles that they are robbed from him by "common thieves" who enter his cell at night.

MISSING

Victor Centeno Castro, 46 years of age, married, farmer, residing in San Jose del Bocay, in the Department of Jinotega, was detained on October 22, 1983; together with his case the apprehensions of the following were reported: Oscar Danilo Sobalvarro Zeledon, 21 years of age, Jorge Francisco Vargas Rivera, 21, Juan Diaz Amirena, 17, Cruz Chavarria Arteta, 19, Domingo Flores Palacios, 18, and Jose Zeledon Rizo, 18, all residing in Jinotega. Their whereabouts has been unknown since their detention.

In view of different efforts made by CPDH, the government responded to different international human rights organizations that these persons had not ever been apprehended and that the information that the government had is that "in December 1983 they had joined counterrevolutionary groups."

Mrs. Maria Nieves Centeno Blandon, companion in life of Victor Centeno Castro, appeared before CPDH to state that that reply of the government is false, since they were all taken in their house of residence by a patrol under the command of Gabriel Sanchez, the one in charge of the San Jose de Bocay command, and in which State Security member of Odel Garcia operated, both still in service in the city of Jinotega.

UNION MEMBERS

On Thursday, October 24, 1985, the CTN, a union organization with Christian leanings, was entered militarily by members of the General Administration of State Security (DGSE), who proceeded to take the national leaders of that organization, Sergio Gutierrez, Agustin Rodriguez Lopez, and Eugenio Membreno, all members of the National Executive Committee.

All of them were taken to the jails of State Security known as El Chipote, where they received humiliating treatment and were locked up in dark and bad-smelling cells, after having been photographed and having had their fingerprints taken. They were interrogated on the origins of a CTN declaration in relation to the state of emergency, and at all times were treated as "thieves," "scoundrels," etc.

Agustin Rodriguez was told that the only alternative to avoiding jail was becoming an informer for State Security and the Sandinista Workers Confederation (CTS).

After six hours they were released and the offices emptied, accounting documents and private documents such as passports being taken, which were not returned.

On the same day the house of Carlos Huembes Trejos, Secretary General of the CTN, was searched by members of the State Security and the same at that of Executive Committee member Miguel Salgado Baez, who at that time were not at their respective houses, but their family members were subjected to degrading treatment.

POLITICIANS

The Nicaraguan Democratic Coordinator (CDN), a coalition of different democratic sectors of the country, reported to CPDH that as a result of a communique released by this coalition of the opposition, related to the recently established State of Emergency, they were summoned to the offices of the General Administration of State Security (DGSE). The persons were: Dr. Eduardo Rivas Gasteazoro, President of CDN, and Dr. Luis Rivas Leiva, Secretary General of the Social Democratic Party (PSD), who after being put in dark one-square meter cells were photographed, had their fingerprints taken, and before being released were threatened by the National Chief of State Security, Comandante Lenin Cerna, that if they kept on challenging the State of Emergency, they would be jailed for more time.

The Nicaraguan Democratic Coordinator (CDN), also denounced the detention for a period of four hours of Lic. Erick Ramirez, President of the Social Christian Party and the detention for three days of Dr. Enrique Meneses Pena, leader of the Constitutionalist Liberal Party and director of the Unit Center and Democratic Promotion, after the fortieth anniversary of the United Nations had been celebrated in this center, a ceremony at which representatives of different diplomatic delegations accredited in the country were present. Both Lic. Erick Ramirez as well as Dr. Meneses Pena were threatened with new detentions if they continued their critical position toward the government.

RELIGIOUS

The Archiepiscopal Curia of Managua reported on October 15 of this year, that in the morning (before the rights of citizens were suspended) members of the General Administration of State Security militarily took over the premises of the Archdiocese Social Advancement Commission (COPROSA), which belong to that curia; the employees were forced to leave the offices, and they were not even allowed to remove their private vehicles from the premises. Entry into the premises was not permitted for the Archbishop of Managua, Cardinal Miguel Obando Bravo, nor the Asst. Bishop of Managua, Mons. Bosco Vivas. The spokesman for the curia, Mons. Bismarck Carballo, was removed from the premises violently upon the direct orders of Comandante Lenin Cerna, National Chief of State Security.

Although the authorities of the Catholic Church were not notified officially of the reason for these actions, the government has stated publicly that it was to withdraw from circulation the existence of a newspaper called Iglesia, which was not registered, nor was it submitted to censorship in the Ministry of the Interior.

Coprosa also operates the printing shop of the Curia of Managua; on the date of this report it continues to be occupied militarily.

CPDH has addressed a letter to the President of Nicaragua, calling these actions part of the repression implemented against the Catholic Church for its critical stance toward injustices. In addition, we have sent a letter to the international human rights associations and the diplomatic delegations, asking for their resolute intervention on behalf of the Catholic Church, which embraces at least 80% of the Nicaraguan population.

SPECIAL

Patricio Bolanos Davis, adult, married, degree in business administration, residing in Managua. He reported to CPDH that on October 23 of this year he was traveling in his Honda Accord on the road to Masaya, near the supermarket in the Centro America district, in the right lane, when he was overtaken by an olive green jeep, with the inscription CJ7. A little further on he caught up with the jeep and to his surprise the soldiers who were traveling in it fired a round from a machine gun which punctured the tires of his vehicle, and one bullet penetrated the left door, breaking the glass, and lodged in the executive briefcase that he had next to his legs.

The vehicle stopped immediately, so that with the help of Dr. Roberto Perez Alonso, his friend who by chance was passing by, they pushed it to the parking lot of the Bank of America, where he told watchmen what had happened; one of them called the police and immediately several members of the police and State Security appeared, and together with Mr. Perez Alonso he was taken detained to the police substation in the Centro America district, where he was interrogated by four members of Security, on his activities, relations, etc. The next day, on October 24, at around 3:30 a.m. he was taken to the offices of the Traffic Department, where they released him at about 11 a.m. on that same day after fining him for "not heeding traffic signals and drunk driving."

NOTE: The reports presented to this office are true according to our knowledge and understanding and are supported by reports and testimonies properly signed. CPDH does not claim to justify or defend persons who have committed crimes; however, it believes that all Nicaraguans have the right to minimum legal guarantees so that true justice will be done.

Managua, November 11, 1985

LETTER CONCERNING NOVEMBER 1985

Managua, December 17, 1985.

Comandante of the Revolution,
Daniel Ortega Saavedra, President of the Republic

MR. PRESIDENT: The Permanent Commission on Human Rights of Nicaragua addresses you in order to express the following to you:

On November 14 of this year, the Executive Secretary of our humanitarian institution was summoned to the Mass Media Office, where Captain Nelba Bandon told him orally that it was absolutely prohibited for CPDH of Nicaragua to issue any type of publication unless it was previously registered and submitted to censorship by said offices of the Ministry of the Interior, and otherwise, with all of its rigor the Law of National Emergency would be applied, an open threat against those whom we work with so that respect for human rights will be a reality in the country.

Different international human rights organizations have come out in support of CPDH and asked your government not only to respect our publications, but to also offer us facilities for carrying out our work; among these organizations are the International League of Human Rights, with its headquarters in New York; the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (CIDH), which is the specialized group of the Organization of American States, and Americas Watch, with its headquarters in Washington.

According to the reports received by CPDH of Nicaragua in November of this year repression begun with the implementation of the State of Emergency last October increased, especially directed at the religious and political sectors that maintain a critical position with regard to the government.

Forty individual detentions by State Security were reported to our offices, apart from massive ones in the region of Nueva Guinea, where the detention of 50 peasants was reported, as well as another 40 peasants in the Esteli region. In addition, nine cases of common prisoners were reported to us, related to human rights violations such as torture and abuse of prisoners, citizens held as hostages until their families are apprehended or appear before them, sentences without the requirements of police law being followed.

Especially in the month of November cases of repression against religious sectors were reported: more than 10 priests of the Catholic Church were called to police offices or to State Security, where they were "warned" not to criticize the state of emergency and not to put out religious statements with authorization. They were also fingerprinted and photographed.

Eight persons from the city of Chinandega, who were members of the Reception Committee on the occasion of the visit that Cardinal Miguel Obando made to that city on November 10, were detained by State Security and threatened before being released to give up all religious activity.

Below we present a small summary of the principal cases denounced in November 1985.

DEATH AND TORTURE

Zacarias Martinez Coronado, 17, single, farmer, residing in the El Almendro District, jurisdiction of the municipality of San Isidro, in the Department of Matagalpa. Member of the Social Christian Party (PSC). On November 9 of this year he was taken in his house by a patrol of the Sandinista Police, composed of six members, under the command of a soldier known only as "TORIBIO;" together with him they arrested Vicente Rodriguez Martinez, 18, also a member of the Social Christian Party.

The reason given by the captors was that of drafting them into Patriotic Military Service, in which they were already registered. They were transferred from the community of El Almendro to the neighboring district of El Carrizo, but on the way they were beaten brutally with the butts of weapons and with military boots.

The youth Vicente Rodriguez was abandoned on the road, having been beaten all over, since his captors felt that he was dead, but he managed to revive and get to his house.

A group of neighbors went out in search of Zacarias Martinez Coronado, finding his body two days later in a state of decomposition, in a place known as "Valle el Chorro," located between El Carrizo and the town of San Isidro.

MISSING

Eduardo Jose Rivas Miranda, 26, single, watchman, living in Bocana de Paivas, in the Department of Zelaya, disappeared from his house on September 28 of this year; he was working as a guard at the National Development Bank of Bocana de Paivas. His sister, Sara Rivas de Cordero, has made a series of efforts before the State Security authorities of Rio Blanco and Matagalpa, but the only information that she has received has been that they are looking for him since he supposedly "joined the contras," including with the weapon he used in his job as watchman, and he was not being held.

Mrs. Rivas de Cordero has received information from peasants that have been prisoners in State Security jails of Rio Blanco, in the Department of Zelaya, that Eduardo Jose Rivas is being held in those jails, that he is incommunicado in a cell known as "La Chiquita," completely naked with a leg immobile, which he drags when he walks.

RELIGIOUS

Ramiro Matus Campos, 45, married, with a degree in pedagogical sciences and residing in Jinotepe, in the Department of Carazo, who is the coordinator of the community of charismatics called "House of Yavhe," which operates in Jinotepe, was detained by members of State Security in Jinotepe, on November 19 of this year, when he appeared because of a summons from said agency of the Ministry of the Interior.

On three previous occasions Mr. Matus Campos had received threats of apprehension if he did not give up his religious activities.

Mr. Campos' wife, Mrs. Yelva Del Carmen De Matus, was fired from her job two days after the detention. She is a teacher and had been such for 18 years; the reason given against her is that there were "orders" from the regional delegation of the Ministry of Health.

Mr. Juan Ramon Macis Norori, who belongs to the same community, was jailed the same November 19 of this year by members of State Security.

The Catholic priest Dionisio Quintalilla, who is the spiritual leader of the congregation of the "House of Yavhe," appeared to carry out efforts on behalf of the detained persons but he was threatened, photographed, and fingerprinted at said offices of State Security.

Mr. Ramiro Matus Campos was finally released on December 3, 1985.

POLITICIANS

Erick Ramirez Benavente: President of the Social Christian Party reported to the CPDH of Nicaragua that the repression against members of his party has increased since the implementation of the State of Emergency on October 15 of this year. Among the principal hostile acts against the PSC in November are the following:

In their respective editions of November 1, the official media Barricada, El Nuevo Diario and El Sistema Sandinista De Television tried to tie the Social Christian Party to illegal activities related to military service, through tententious publications.

On November 8 Miguel Angel Manzanares, National Attorney for the PSC, was intimidated and threatened by the soldier in charge of the community of Mangos, jurisdiction of San Isidro, in the Department of Matagalpa, to desist from any partisan activity in that locality.

On November 9 Zacarias Martinez Coronado, member of the National Peasant Union of the PSC, resident of the district of El Almendro, jurisdiction of San Isidro, in the Department of Matagalpa, was murdered after being taken by a military patrol that detained him supposedly to induct him by force into military service.

The same day, November 9, Vicente Rodriguez Martinez was detained together with his cousin Zacarias Martinez C. and beaten savagely by members of the military patrol that apprehended them, until leaving him completely lifeless, thinking that he was dead.

The members of the PSC that are in jail have been subjected to intensive pressures in order to try to force them to "make a statement" at "press conferences" on supposed conspiratorial ties between leaders of this party and armed groups trying to overthrow the FSLN government.

UNION MEMBERS

Nicolas Antonio Rodriguez Gutierrez, member of the Confederation of Workers of Nicaragua (CTN). On October 19 of this year he was taken by members of the Sandinista People's Militia (MPS) in the community of Cerro de Agua, Department of Jinotega, being moved to the jails of State Security of Matagalpa, known as La Perrera, where he still remains, without concrete charges having been made against him.

CPDH of Nicaragua has intervened with a formal writ of Habeus Corpus before the Court of Appeals of Nicaragua in order to try to establish the causes of his detention, but so far that legal recourse has not provided any result.

FREEDOM OF EXPRESSION AND INFORMATION

Normal Talavera Sevilla, 29, married, journalist and of this domicile, who works as an editor for the newspaper LA PRENSA, where he is in charge of covering everything related to religion, was detained by members of the General Administration of State Security (DGSE) on November 10 of this year in the evening at his home.

That morning he had traveled to the City of Chinandega in order to cover the visit that day of Cardinal Miguel Obando Bravo, Archbishop of Managua to that city of Chinandega. Before his detention he was interrogated on whether he had taken photos at the reception given Cardinal Obando in Chinandega. Members of Security proceeded to search his house, taking with them a family photo album, his personal correspondence, 13 cassettes of English lessons, his passport and a copy of the newspaper IGLESIA, which was the official publication of the Archbishopric Curia of Managua that was prohibited on October 15, 1985.

Journalist Talavera Sevilla was kept in the jails known as El Chipote until November 14, kept in an isolation cell, competely dark and foul-smelling, which is under surface level and whose only ventilation was a tube that went from the roof of the cell to the outside.

He was threatened to give up his work as a religious correspondent and if possible to stop working for the newspaper La Prensa. He continues as a journalist for La Prensa.

NOTE: The reports made to this office are true according to our knowledge and understanding and are supported by reports and testimonies properly signed. CPDH does not claim to justify or defend persons who have committed crimes; however, it believes that all Nicaraguans have the right to minimum legal guarantees so that true justice will be done.

Managua, January 9, 1986.
Comandante of the Revolution,
Tomas Borge Martinez, Minister of the Interior.

COMANDANTE BORGE: On December 14 of last year members of the General Administration of State Security arrested Mr. Jose Altamirano Rojas, who is 43 years of age, married and a leader of the Confederation of Workers of Nicaragua (CTN), an organization in which he occupies the position of Associate Secretary General.

Since the date of his detention, Mr. Altamirano Rojas has been kept in the jails of State Security in Managua, known as El Chipote, without concrete charges having been filed against him and his family has only been informed that he is being investigated in relation to "counterrevolutionary activities."

Mr. Jose Altamirano Rojas is a man of high moral principles and at all times has shown his vocation in the civic struggle for the rights of workers, which in September 1982 earned him from the President of Venezuela, Dr. Luis Herrera Campins, the First of May Order, as recognition of his union activity, carried out within the laws of the country.

This Commission on many occasions has received reports and denunciations in which a clear tendency is evident on the part of members of State Security to implicate Mr. Altamirano Rojas in supposed counterrevolutionary activities.

Among the principal reports given to CPDH in relation to Mr. Altamirano Rojas are:

(1) On December 16, 1982, he was called to the offices of the police department of Managua, known as Palo Alto, where he was subjected to an interrogation on the publication of a CTN bulletin.

(2) In July 1984, a supposed prisoner named Hernan Espinoza who identified himself at a "press conference" as "chief of the internal front of the contras," mentioned him as one of the persons with whom he had "contacts."

CPDH of Nicaragua had reports beginning in March 1983 that this individual Hernan Espinoza was a State Security agent and although he was tried and sentenced together with other persons, he is currently free, through a pardon, but the others such as Dr. Adan Rugama are still in prison.

(3) On December 2, 1984, he was prevented from leaving Nicaragua in order to attend a union program in the Dominican Republic; the pretext given by the Migration official at the airport was that his passport was "streaked," that is, stained with pen ink on one of its pages. Said streaks or stains were made by the Migration agent in his presence.

(4) In February 1985 he was informed by another CTN member (whose name we shall keep to ourselves) that the latter was being pressured by State Security to report on all actions taken by Mr. Altamirano Rojas.

(5) On October 24, 1985, the date when the CTN offices were entered militarily by State Security and three of its main leaders taken, two agents of that agency appeared at Mr. Altamirano Rojas' home, with evident intentions of apprehending him, which did not come about since he was not there.

On the basis of all of the above, Mr. Comandante, we cannot help but deduce that the current imprisonment of Mr. Jose Altamirano Rojas is but one more link in the chain of pressures, persecutions, and harassment of which the CTN of Nicaragua, as well as its main leaders, have been the object, for carrying out the sacred mission of organizing the less favored sectors of our people.

We take the liberty of reminding you that more than 100 international agreements in which union freedom in all its forms is guaranteed have been signed by our government, but that in practice, this union freedom continues to be an aspiration for the sectors that maintain an independent and critical line toward the Sandinista Front government.

In the name of the family of Mr. Jose Altamirano Rojas, the CTN of Nicaragua and our own names, we come before you to ask that the martyrdom of a just man not be continued and that he be released immediately.

This Commission feels that when Nicaraguan workers are persecuted and jailed simply because they think differently from the government party, then the very bases of this revolution are being attacked.

Sincerely,

Permanent Commission on Human Rights of Nicaragua.

LINO HERNANDEZ TRIGUEROS,
Executive Secretary.

AN EXTRAORDINARY TEACHER—MRS. CHRISTA McAULIFFE

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I would like to share with my colleagues an excellent article about Mrs. Christa McAuliffe, who died in yesterday's tragic explosion of the space shuttle Challenger.

The article was written by a reporter who met her briefly before her final selection from among thousands of teachers to be the first private civilian in space.

John E. Mulligan, manager of the Providence Journal's Washington Bureau, met Mrs. McAuliffe for about 2 hours in a small Capitol Hill office with dozens of other reporters but she made a lasting impression.

Mrs. McAuliffe left, as part of her legacy, the clear picture of an unassuming, enthusiastic teacher who enjoyed her work with children every bit as much as her work preparing to teach them about space flight.

She appeared to "have been plucked from our midst" to be as member of the space shuttle Challenger crew, but she clearly was an extraordinary person.

I ask unanimous consent that the article from today's Providence Journal, "Recalling the Girl Next Door," by John E. Mulligan, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RECALLING THE GIRL NEXT DOOR
(By John E. Mulligan)

WASHINGTON.—I met the woman months ago for a total of maybe two hours' time, most of it shared by dozens of other reporters. So why do I feel as if I just lost a sister?

When Christa McAuliffe greeted me in a little Capitol Hill office last July 18, I mistook her for the receptionist. She smiled, showed me to a seat and asked how she could help while I waited to interview Dick Methia, the New Bedford teacher among the finalists vying for the chance to be the first private citizen in space.

We chatted for a few minutes before Mrs. McAuliffe got around to introducing herself as another of the 10 chosen from among 11,000 teachers.

She's not the one, I thought instantly. Too sweet, too unassuming, too down-to-earth to match the right-stuff macho we seem to associate with the space program.

But the next day at the White House, Vice President Bush announced that the sunny-faced woman in the mustard jacket was indeed the one. Score one for the plain people, I thought, and I wasn't alone. The social studies teacher from Concord (N.H.) High was an obvious favorite with her competitors and with the reporters and officials who knew her.

Mrs. McAuliffe's first impulse was a gesture to the others who had made it through the space agency's exacting selection process. "I've made nine wonderful friends over the past two weeks," she said with some tears, "and when that shuttle goes, there may be one body but there's gonna be 10 souls I'm taking with me."

Coming from the skilled politicians who do most of the talking in this city, that could have seemed contrived. Coming from Mrs. McAuliffe in the unmistakable accents of her native Boston, it was touching.

Coming back to me from the pages of my notebook yesterday, it was—like every detail of the disaster—monstrously ironic.

It took a dozen viewings, it seemed, for me to get past the surface of the televised image, the cruel beauty of the fireball and the smoke plume etching themselves against the blue.

To watch the faces of Christa McAuliffe's students at Concord High School was to know that their young memories will be etched with that image like mine was etched one eighth-grade afternoon with the image of Jacqueline Kennedy's blood-spattered pink suit and pillbox hat.

It's been a good few years, I realized last July at the White House, since I've paid much attention to the space program. But the selection of Christa McAuliffe made perfection of President Reagan's masterly decision to make a teacher, of all people, the first ordinary citizen in space.

The space agency doesn't tell how it selects the shuttle travelers and it must have been tough to choose these 10 uniformly attractive and bright personalities from a most slighted profession. But I fancied that Christa McAuliffe stood out because in her mind teaching was so clearly as noble a profession as space flight.

Each candidate had to propose a personal project for the shuttle flight. Mrs. McAuliffe's was disarmingly straightforward and teacherly. Like the pioneer women crossing the prairies in their Conestogas more than a century ago, she said, "she would keep a journal of an ordinary person's perspective of history."

She said she wanted to teach the children that "the space program belongs to them and to try to bring them up with the space program" by answering the children's questions. "How's the food have to be different? How's the toilet have to be different?" she wondered.

Since last summer, I've caught myself following the space program for the first time in years and silently rooting for this woman whose dancing eyes suggested that her classes must have been a lot of fun.

It was refreshing that she never adopted the low-key coolness of the NASA persona. "Oh my God, it's beautiful," she murmured in wonderment when she witnessed her first liftoff at close hand last fall.

Her voice came back to me yesterday in ghastly contrast to that of the anonymous NASA announcer who called the explosion "obviously a major malfunction."

God knows we have to grieve for the six professionals and their families. These are a brave class of people, after all, who occasionally convince even the cynics among us that people are capable of majestic feats.

But when I finally absorbed that television image yesterday, my thoughts went to this woman because she of all the space travelers is the one who seemed truly to have been plucked from our midst.

When the image of the fireball forces itself on them, I hope the kids can summon up some other pictures. I hope they can see Christa McAuliffe in the weightless chamber, laughing and yelling, "I love it" with that childish wonder that all the great teachers keep for life.

I hope they can see and hear Christa McAuliffe after the announcement that she was the one who would fly: "I'm still kind of floating. I don't know when I'll come down to earth."

Christa McAuliffe was one of those extraordinary people—one in 11,000, you might say—who can make strangers believe that maybe she is their sister.

FLASH OF DESTINY

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, in the face of tragedy such as that which struck our Nation yesterday, our feelings sometimes are best captured in the words of the poet rather than the politician. Today I met such a poet. Moments after watching disaster strike the Challenger space shuttle, Renna McPhatter was moved to express the thoughts of her countrymen in verse that already has moved me and others to tears. As my offering of sympathy to the families of the crew of the Challenger and to my fellow citizens, I ask unanimous consent that these beautiful words, "Flash of Destiny," be placed in the RECORD.

Mrs. McPhatter, who lives in Seneca, MD, is a native of Greece and came to the United States to live in 1955. Like so many others who have immigrated to our shores, she understands in a deep way the blessing of liberty and democracy enjoyed here. One day each week is given "to my democracy," she says. Today she has given us her heart in these tender words:

FLASH OF DESTINY

Oh God, we fall the hardest
When we aim so very high
But thus you charged us, Lord
And you challenged us to try.

As a Nation stood with hope
In our lips were solemn cheers
While gazing at eagles
Our eyes were filled with tears

In a sudden flash of light
Less than one more breath away
Thy majestic hand of destiny
Called seven more with you to stay

In Thy hands, Oh Lord, we pray, take Michael, Gregory, Francis, and Christa
Also Ronald, Ellison, and Judith
Into the realm of heavenly vista

In Thy breast, Oh Lord, we pray, hold
The hearts now filled with sorrow
Guide their steps each day and year
'Til their glory of some tomorrow

Throughout this land weave two wreaths
Of pine cones and steel with orchids laced
Leave one here in their memory
Take the other with you into space

We may again the hardest fall
When we aim, Oh Lord, so high
But we feel You charged us, Lord
And for this challenge, again we'll try!

TAX REFORM AND U.S. INTERNATIONAL COMPETITIVENESS

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, as we begin the 2d session of the 99th Congress, there are few issues more important than tax reform and our country's international competitiveness. President Reagan has initiated an historic effort to reform our Nation's Tax Code, an effort in my estimation which is long overdue. It is a matter of basic fairness that our Tax Code should be simpler, tax income at lower rates, and lessen the tax burden on the poor and working poor. Although the bill reported by the House of Representatives is far from perfect, I commend the President for his personal commitment to keeping this vital initiative alive.

At the same time, it is a matter of fundamental importance that tax reform take into account the necessity of promoting capital investment, productivity, job creation, economic growth, and American competitiveness in the international marketplace.

While capital is mobile, American families, towns, and communities are not. Unless sufficient incentives for capital formation and industrial growth are maintained, more American companies will locate offshore to take advantage of lower taxation and wage rates. Given the inability of the United States to compete with foreign labor on a price basis, it is imperative that we encourage capital formation to encourage investment and greater productivity.

The investment tax credit [ITC] has been an integral part of our Tax Code since President Kennedy proposed it in 1961. Originally a 7-percent credit for capital expenditures, it was suspended from October 1966 to March 1967, and late repealed in 1969. The 7-percent credit was reenacted in 1971 and expanded to 10 percent in 1975. Economic studies reveal that the credit has been a significant incentive for capital investment.

In 1981, Congress enacted the accelerated cost recovery system [ACRS] and expanded the ITC to counter the effects of double-digit inflation and increase the competitive position of U.S. industry in the world economy. ACRS, known as 10-5-3, also significantly simplified our depreciation system.

Mr. President, many of my Pennsylvania constituents have studied the House tax bill and its effect on capital formation, and have overwhelmingly concluded that adoption of this bill would have tremendously adverse effects on capital investment, productivity, job creation, economic growth, and industrial competitiveness.

The House bill will raise the cost of capital in the United States in comparison with other countries and thus encourage United States and foreign companies to shift investment abroad. It is estimated that this will result in a decrease in investment of $30 billion by 1988 and a loss of 1.5 million industrial jobs. This could increase our foreign trade deficit and increase social welfare spending at a time when Federal, State, and local governments are already under severe budgetary constraints.

Mr. President, based on 1982 data, it is estimated that this economic downturn will result in the loss of 90,000 production jobs in the State of Pennsylvania alone. My State, Mr. President, simply cannot afford the loss of 12 percent of its industrial jobs. Many areas of my State, particularly in western Pennsylvania near Pittsburgh and northeast Pennsylvania near Wilkes-Barre-Scranton have not fully recovered from the past recession. Many towns, such as Clairton, are on the brink of bankruptcy due to job losses. Many cannot even pay for fire or police services on a current basis. It would be economic folly to change course dramatically from a policy encouraging capital investment, job creation, and economic growth.

Mr. President, I would like to stress that we cannot overemphasize the importance of maintaining a competitive position in the worldwide marketplace for American companies. A recent study by Arthur Anderson & Co. assesses that adoption of the House bill would move the United States from a competitive position of tax treatment for capital investment to dead last among industrial nations. I ask unanimous consent that the results of this study be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] Class 4 of the Tax Reform Act of 1985 (H.R. 3838) incentive depreciation system includes, for example: Mining equipment and assets used in the manufacture of electric and nonelectrical machinery including machine tools, farm and construction machinery, commercial and home appliances, mining and oil field equipment, business machines, motor vehicles, wood products, and finished plastic products. Calculations for the comparison were made with respect to light manufacturing textile equipment. Class 4 equipment is subject to double declining balance depreciation over a 10-yr. recovery period, switching to straight line at the optimal point.

[2] Although Japan's capital cost system is inferior to that of the United States, research by Dr. John B. Shoven, Stanford University, suggests that when all factors affecting the cost of capital are considered, Japanese investors enjoy a substantial advantage over their United States competitors. Japan's advantage over the United States stems from: (1) Much lower taxes on capital income at the individual level; (2) individual's almost unlimited ability to deduct savings from taxable income; (3) reduced corporate tax rates on income paid out as dividends; and (4) much higher debt/equity ratios than in the United States.

[3] Class 4 of the Tax Reform Act of 1985 (H.R. 3838) incentive depreciation system includes, for example: Mining equipment and assets used in the manufacture of electrical and nonelectrical machinery including machine tools, farm and construction machinery, commercial and home appliances, mining and oil field equipment, business machines, motor vehicles, wood products, and finished plastic products. Note.—The computations assume an inflation rate of 5 percent and a 4, 8, or 12 percent real rate of return. Depreciation is computed on an asset placed in service by a calendar year taxpayer on July 1, 1986 without regard to the mid-month convention. Rank shown for all foreign countries assumes current law for the United States (ACRS).

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, in the months ahead, I plan to play an active role advocating capital investment incentives. As cochairman of the Northeast-Midwest Senate Coalition, and chairman of the Senate Coal Caucus, I am convinced that this region and many vital industries, including coal, would be adversely and unfairly affected by changes proposed in the House bill. Some changes in ACRS and the ITC may be advisable, such as limiting incentives to domestically manufactured assets or targeting the ITC to so-called blue-collar productive assets. However, unless the accelerated cost recovery system and investment tax credit are maintained, I fear America faces a receding economic tide. Experience has taught us that it is a far wiser course to maintain incentives for capital investment than to eliminate fair investment treatment and cast American workers into the sea of economic recession.

CHRISTA McAULIFFE, A TEACHER TO APPRECIATE

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, last week I introduced a resolution to designate the first Friday of each May as "National Teacher Appreciation Day." In my statement, I expressed how proud I was to be offering the legislation during the week we were scheduled to send our first teacher into space.

As we join in national mourning for the deaths of the seven astronauts yesterday, Americans learn more each hour about the kind of teacher and person Christa McAuliffe was. The more we learn, the more we respect her dedication to her profession and the children she taught.

My comments last week applauded the opportunity this flight represented—to bring Government and education together, to bring classroom science to the real world of space flight and thus inspire students nationwide, and to publicly recognize the important contributions teachers make to our society. These thoughts are strengthened by the national tragedy we are sharing, and our personal appreciation of Mrs. McAuliffe's efforts is heightened as the details of her life and teaching career unfold.

Christa McAuliffe consistently made the relationship between learning and life real for her students. She shared with them the challenge of entering the national competition to fly with the shuttle. Through her experience, they saw how fulfilling it can be to dream and to realize that dream through hard work and confidence. Had Mrs. McAuliffe not been selected as our teacher in space, I am equally sure she would have shared the experience in a way that taught the value of the quest itself above winning, the personal satisfaction to be gained from putting forth one's best effort, whether it is rewarded or not.

It was not only adventures such as space flight that Christa McAuliffe shared with her students. And it was not only vicarious experience she offered them. She taught American history through the journals of common people like the pioneers who settled the American West. She took her students out into the community as well, where they interacted with the people and institutions that comprise their real world. She even took them to prisons, so they would understand that not all challenges facing this Nation are as glamorous as flight in space.

Her death makes us all her students, learning or relearning the lesson of risk and our own mortality along with her lessons of courage, giving, and aspiration. Christa McAuliffe had great hopes for what her shuttle flight could mean for the esteem of all teachers, the inspiration of all students. I think the example of her life and character achieves that hope.

TEXTBOOKS: WHAT ARE THEY TEACHING ABOUT COMMUNISM?

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, a remarkable young man, Gary L. Bauer, Under Secretary at the Department of Education, recently gave a superb speech to the Association of American Publishers at their annual meeting. In his remarks, Mr. Bauer addressed the subject of school textbooks, their uses and abuses, and their roles in a free society and in a Communist society.

In a free society textbooks should serve the purpose of teaching the truth about the world. Mr. Bauer points out, however, that in our society contemporary textbooks are falling far short of the mark, especially in their failure to present objectively the truth about communism. On the other hand, textbooks in the Soviet Union and other Communist countries make little pretense about conveying the truth about the world; text books are used instead for indoctrination in Communist ideology.

Mr. President, so that Mr. Bauer's speech may reach a wider audience than the publishers' association, I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPEECH BY GARY L. BAUER

It is my pleasure to be with you this evening. You are, at the risk of flattery, important people centrally involved in the task of the education of children in the most free and arguably the most powerful nation in the world. This puts you in an enviable position but one, at the same time, that is burdened with responsibilities. Living in a free nation, you have great discretion in what you publish—in what you believe is important for our children to learn. You should not lightly dismiss this fact. For although every country has textbooks and textbook publishers, few countries give them a milieu of liberty in which to operate. In fact, it might be edifying to examine the role of your counterparts in the rest of the world—particularly in the communist block and their Third World allies. When one undertakes such examination, it becomes clear that what happens to children under communism is not in any sense of the word "education." It's indoctrination in which textbooks play a key role.

Thus, Soviet school children learn from their textbooks that John Wilkes Booth was a "hireling of the slave-owning South, and, it is suspected, of the large Northern capitalists." And that the American government practiced "bacteriological warfare" against the Indian population. And that "under the conditions of capitalism, one-third of Americans are unable to buy necessary food." These "facts" can be found in history books used by students throughout the Soviet Union, and according to a textbook study done in 1981 they are typical of the Soviet treatment of American history.

In a recent article in American Education, Arch Puddington has accurately described what happens in Soviet classrooms.

"From the Russian Revolution onwards, education has served a special function in communist societies, one radically different from the role of education in the democratic world. While practically every society develops educational policies with an eye towards the inculcation of attitudes of responsible citizenship and respect for the national culture, communist regimes teach children to become productive and patriotic citizens in ways that vary sharply from the methods that a free society would find acceptable. Communist and democratic educational systems represent two fundamentally opposed philosophies, not simply different techniques for achieving similar goals, a fact that educational authorities in communist societies readily admit. In countries ruled by a single, monolithic communist party, the schools are expected to instill "socialist" values in children, promote unquestioning devotion towards the motherland and the communist system, encourage contempt for other, non-communist societies (the United States above all) and convince the younger generation that there is but one correct interpretation of history, that set down by the state. In other words, indoctrination—pure and simple—is perceived as a legitimate job of the schools."

George Will tells the story of a young Soviet teacher who died heroically when he fell on a live grenade to protect his pupils in the Ukrainian village of Ivanichi. What was a grenade doing in the school? According to the London Times, the teacher, a graduate of a KGB border guard college, had been delivering military instruction, a compulsory part of the curriculum for Soviet children. Apparently, a live grenade was accidentally mixed with the demonstration models. The manual the teacher used teaches "hatred for the enemies of socialism." It also teaches the assembly of machine guns and the use of bayonet and rifle butts in the "decisive armed conflict of two opposing world systems."

In the Third World, where a number of communist or quasi-communist regimes are in power, the situation is even more disturbing. In Cuba, Vietnam, Afghanistan and similar Third World countries, the imparting of knowledge takes a back seat to instilling ideology and hatred of the West in general and America in particular.

Let's take a look at what is happening in Vietnam, for example. After the war, the Communist government nationalized the entire educational system, a significant step since many of the schools were run by religious denominations. Next, massive purges of teachers were instituted with almost all male teachers under 45 sent to re-education camps, where some languished for many years. Within each school and university, a special vice principal for political affairs was appointed. These individuals, almost uniformly from North Vietnam, were given direct control over curricula. Each school also contains a network of "young informants," headed by a communist party member. They report on students or teachers who criticize the regime or make politically unacceptable statements.

As for the curriculum, here again the dividing line between propaganda and education was effectively abolished. First-grade children were confronted with math problems such as:

Our troops went to the battlefield and killed five American imperialists and three puppet troops. How many troops did our troops kill?

The significance of all this was noted by a teacher who succeeded in fleeing the country:

"The purpose . . . is to create and nurture hatred in the minds of children. . . . The insidious thing is that such stuff is made an integral part of every subject taught, and that children in the classroom must repeat it all the time, so that they get used to it."

Our way is different. Our children are spared this sort of indoctrination. We are rightly proud, as free men and women, of this, and we cannot doubt that our children are better off as a result. Our freedom, however, also brings with it a responsibility. If no government agency can tell you what to publish—and clearly in this country none must ever do so—then it falls on your shoulders to act responsibly in helping decide what our children must learn.

The decisions that you and your companies make about the structure and content of textbooks, determine in large part, what goes into the teaching of our children. You may have heard these statistics before, but let me mention them as a reminder of the significant responsibility you bear: 95 percent of reading in high school is done from textbooks; supplementary materials, such as workbooks and skill sheets, account for 70 percent of time allocated for reading instruction in grade schools; and teachers, in general, are extremely dependent upon textbooks and teacher guides for the majority of their classroom instruction.

What is in our textbooks, what we choose to teach our children about our free institutions and about those governments with which we share the globe, takes on added significance in light of international developments in recent months. The US-USSR Summit, which resulted in preliminary agreement for widespread student exchanges between our two countries, should lead us to review whether our children are adequately prepared to meet and debate their Soviet counterparts.

There is some cause for concern. Let me cite an example. Some months ago, The Washington Post carried a story about 15 American teenagers and 15 Soviet teenagers who met near Washington to discuss the threat of nuclear war. The Americans were members of a county school's talented and gifted school program. The Russians attend an embassy school, and are the children of Soviet diplomats. Here are some excerpts from occurred:

"'What do you think of America?' asked one (American) pupil. "America is a good country," replied Dmitry Domakhin, 12, whose father is a diplomat. . . . "It's such a pity that it's a capitalist country." Dmitry grinned as the audience of parents and pupils laughed. Later, he posed his own question to the American children. "In the Soviet Union, when we have lunch at school, the lunch is free," he said. "I just want to know, how much do you have to pay?" Ninety to 95 cents per meal was the answer. Dmitry smiled again.

"Alexei Palladin, 14, whose father is a correspondent for (a) Soviet newspaper, pointed out that the Soviet Union and the United States have been friends before.

"'What do you know about the Second World War?' Alexei asked the Americans. No answer. He nodded as if that was what he expected. "Nobody even knows," he said, "that we were allies. We were fighting Nazism together. . . ."

"Alexei sat down to hearty applause . . . Afterward, the children were invited to contribute to the "Peace Ribbon," a seven-mile long strip of peace slogans that encircled the Pentagon in August to mark the 40th anniversary of the bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki."

If you are like me, you no doubt find these stories depressing and alarming. I would have given a great deal if just one of those American children would have been bold enough or knowledgeable enough to bring up the Nazi-Soviet pact that helped usher in World War II, or the Gulag where uncounted men and women of conscience have suffered, or the genocide taking place in Afghanistan, or free speech of Andre Sakharov.

Now, there is a temptation in our anger to blame these children, but we would be wrong to do so. For these are, after all, our children. If we have not prepared them for the world they must live in, then it is our fault. If they are not aware of the special freedom they enjoy, then perhaps we haven't been aggressive enough in telling them about it. And if they seem to be children who have forgotten the past, then perhaps it is because no one has ever taught it to them.

So why is there this confusion among some of them about the nature of the societies with which we share the globe? Unfortunately, a case can be made that part of the problem resides in our textbooks—textbooks that are quick to be hyper—critical of American institutions, while glossing over the intrinsic character of totalitarian governments.

Many textbooks reflect the views of prominent historians and social scientists who refuse to see a difference between the United States and the Soviet Union, who refer to both nations commonly with the neutral term, superpower, but are unable or unwilling to make crucial distinctions about both systems of government.

One can see this in a booklet published by the National Council for the Social Studies on the subject of teaching about human rights in the schools. In the introduction of the booklet, aimed at teachers, the editors contend there are several ways to each about human rights—including the comparative approach. And then to make their point, the authors say the following: "In Western Europe and the United States, for example, civil and political rights such as freedom of speech, voting, and due process are of prime concern. In Eastern European countries, economic rights such as the right to work, to form trade unions, to strike, and to take vacations are considered essential." Now never mind the questionable concept of teaching that freedom of speech is comparable to the right to take a vacation. That is dubious enough. But where is it in Eastern Europe, under the yoke of Soviet Communism that one finds the rights described? Lech Walesa, for one, will certainly be interested in knowing he has the right to form a trade union and to strike.

Recently, I examined six global history texts, all newly written or revised since 1983, and all of them aimed at the secondary school market. I was particularly interested in how these books handled issues of contemporary geopolitical significance—to see just what it is that a 14-year old is supposed to end up knowing about problems besetting the world.

One world history book widely used in America's high schools has a section on Soviet women. It says the following: "Equality for women in the USSR is a reality . . . They receive equal pay for equal work . . . Men and women are treated equally under Soviet law. They may marry or vote when they are 18." These statements would be laughable if the misinformation they spread were not so dangerous. Soviet women have the right to vote in the same context as Soviet men—in the context of a society that gives them only hand-picked candidates of the communist party and no one else. This shouldn't be a hard concept for a textbook writer to understand or to explain. Equal pay for equal work—yes, I suppose one could say that is true, but only in the context of an economic system completely controlled by a central government, with little chance for real initiative or economic independence. To fail to tell our children these facts is to seriously mislead them about the nature of the Soviet system.

Coincidentally, this textbook also seems to suffer from amnesia. No mention can be found in it of the great man-made famine in the Soviet Union in 1932-33 in which the Soviet Government used food as a weapon to kill more than seven million men, women and children in the Ukraine. Nor is there any mention to the millions that died in China in the name of communism, in the name of building a new man. Nor of the genocide that took place in Cambodia following the communist takeover of that nation in 1975.

The other texts were hardly better. Although most of the books look reasonably accurate up through World War II, when we get to modern times, they falter badly.

What happened in Vietnam after the war? Several texts described the atrocities visited upon neighboring Cambodia by Pol Pot, and all mentioned the "boat people." But only one explained that these were refugees from a brutal, totalitarian regime. In several books, they just happened to set sail.

Why did Russian troops move into Afghanistan in 1979? One volume got it about right: "The Soviets invaded Afghanistan to bring that country under their complete control. The UN and the United States condemned the invasion. Soviet forces in Afghanistan were only 250 miles from the Persian Gulf." In the other books, however, the Soviet Goal was simply to shore up the government in Kabul, to fend off guerrilla attacks, or—remarkably—because "the Soviets feared that an uprising among the Muslims of Afghanistan might spread to . . . the Soviet Union." In short, five out of six give the impression that Moscow's move was essentially defensive or vaguely compassionate. None, it must be noted, has a word about exploding toys that maim Afghani children.

What is the U.N.'s track record? Every volume waxes eloquent about its founding. Several also indicate that it has not been hugely effective as a peacekeeper. Only one, however, acknowledges that "some people" say that "many members use the UN as a place to denounce the policies of the United States" and that "many UN countries openly violate the charter of the UN." None of the others casts even a shred of doubt on the innate virtue of the United Nations.

How is life inside the Soviet empire? Most books discuss suppression of religion and the persecution of dissidents. Solzhenetsyn turns up in five volumes, Sakharov in three. Yet it is easy to derive the impression that ordinary Russians face no real difficulty so long as they don't do odd things like pray or speak out. One volume lauds Soviet successes in bringing about "almost total literacy" saying "In fact, reading has become a national pasttime." Really? What does this mean, in a country where what can be read is determined by a dictatorship?

Here is another book's entire paragraph on Caribbean adventurism: "Castro has been accused of sending military aid to the guerrillas in El Salvador and aid to the Sandinista government in Nicaragua. In 1983 the U.S. Invaded Grenada when it learned that Cuba and the USSR had provided weapons to that country." So far as our hypothetical teenager knows, the U.S. still occupies Grenada, and Castro is merely accused, not convicted, of arming the Managua regime.

In some ways the most telling messages of all are contained in those final chapters on "challenges facing the modern world." In virtually every instances, one finds adoring treatments of science and technology, oddly coupled with "limits to growth" warnings against pollution and resource exhaustion. Economic development in the Third World looms large, as do "changing cultural patterns." There is much talk of the nuclear peril and of global interdependence. But there is rarely any mention of human rights issues; of repression and savagery; of freedom and tyranny; of the conflict between democracy and totalitarianism; or of the fact that only a small fraction of the globe's citizens live under regimes of their own choosing.

Unevenness coupled with relativism, bad history joined to ideology, events without causes or consequences. Such shortcomings do no service to children who will have the burden of preserving liberty in a dangerous world.

So what am I suggesting? Let me make clear that I am not suggesting that textbooks should be in accord with the policy positions of this Administration or any other. Our textbooks should not contain indoctrination masquerading as education. But they also should not read as if they were written by neutrals in the struggle between freedom and slavery. We need do nothing more than tell the truth—the truth about our attributes and about our shortcomings, about our triumphs and about our defeats, about our heroes and about our fools. And we should tell the truth about those who believe and act upon different principles than us—about those who see man as a creature of the state, and not as a child of God endowed with inalienable rights.

Earlier, I mentioned an American textbook that failed to tell about the many atrocities from the Ukraine famine to the genocide in Cambodia commited in the name of Marxism. A Washington journalist contacted one of the writers of this textbook, a history professor at Clark University, to ask why, in 854 pages these significant events were omitted. He responded that he was "afraid of raising the temperature of indignation, because it leads to bad ends in our contemporary world. And so I am generally inclined to tone down what brutalities there are." He added he worried that the children might build up a "hostility" toward communism "without understanding why these things happened." Let me urge you, as publishers, to reject this type of censorship, for it hides from our children the truth. And it is the truth that will in the end keep us free, and preserve liberty for future generations.

Thank you.

MARKUP HEARING ON REORGANIZATION OF DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, next weekend, the Senate Armed Services Committee will begin a markup of a bill directed at reorganization of the Department of Defense. Chairman GOLDWATER and Senator NUNN, in directing this very important legislation, have concluded an extensive set of hearings.

The staff of the committee have prepared their own outline, which has not been endorsed in whole or in part by the committee. However, I and other committee members are desirous of receiving comments on this staff outline as we prepare for the markup session. To inform interested persons who may desire to communicate their views, I ask unanimous consent to have a press release printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOLDWATER AND NUNN RELEASE SUMMARY OF STAFF PROPOSAL ON DEFENSE REORGANIZATION

In a joint statement, Senator Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.) and Senator Sam Nunn (D-Ga.), the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, released a summary of a draft bill on defense reorganization that has been prepared by the Committee staff. The draft legislation would make several organizational changes in the major elements of the Department of Defense: the Office of the Secretary of Defense, the Organization of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the unified and specified commands, and the Military Departments.

For more than three years, the Armed Services Committee has been examining the organization and decision-making procedures of the Defense Department and the Congress. As part of its review, the Committee held a total of 23 hearings with 45 witnesses. In addition, the Committee staff prepared a 645-page report entitled, "Defense Organization: The Need for Change." At the conclusion of the Committee's most recent series of hearings in December 1985, Senator Goldwater and Senator Nunn directed the staff to draft a bill that incorporated, as much as possible, the consensus views that had emerged during the Committee's lengthy examination. The legislative proposal that the staff has now drafted, however, has not been endorsed by the Armed Services Committee or any of its Members.

The Senators explanied that "the summary we are releasing today outlines a staff proposal which was prepared to help the Committee to focus on specific organizational changes in the Defense Department. Although we may not agree with every provision of the draft bill, we do believe that it represents an excellent starting point for the Committee's consideration."

Senator Goldwater and Senator Nunn announced that the Armed Services Committee will begin to mark-up the staff proposal on Tuesday, February 4th.

A summary of the draft bill prepared by the Committee staff is attached to this press release.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

CONRAIL SALE AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1985

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (S. 638) to amend the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 to provide for the transfer of ownership of the Consolidated Rail Corporation to the private sector, and for other purposes.

MORGAN STANLEY CONRAIL BID

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I understand that the pending item of business will be the Danforth motion to waive section 303 of the Budget Act with respect to Conrail. I also understand that there still may be the possibility of a motion to recommit the Conrail bill to the Commerce Committee with instructions to report back on the Morgan Stanley proposal.

Mr. President, I rise today to express concern over the possible motion to recommit the bill to the Commerce Committee. Although I disagree with the chairman on certain aspects of the Conrail issue, I fail to see any significant purpose to be served by sending this legislation back to the Commerce Committee.

The chairman has conducted fair and extensive hearings on the issue in the Commerce Committee. Indeed, he was very cooperative in holding additional hearings to address specific Members' concerns, and I would like to commend him for his able handling of this matter.

The Commerce Committee has done its work, it has spoken, and although I happened to be on the losing side I see no purpose to be served by recommitting the bill to the committee. Even though I am fairly confident we would have a much stronger vote in opposition to the Norfolk Southern bid today than we did earlier this year, that is not a reason to recommit the bill to the committee.

It is true that we do not have adequate information to fully assess the merits of this issue. We lack important information on the proposal. But that is a problem created by the agencies and others involved in the process. It is not for lack of hearings or committee probing. All the questions were asked. We will not get the answers any faster—if at all—by recommitting this matter to the Commerce Committee.

The Commerce Committee and its chairman have done their work on this bill and we should dispense with it on the floor. For these reasons, I will support the chairman if there is a vote on a motion to recommit.

Having said that, let me make it very clear that I strongly support the Morgan Stanley proposal and am prepared to debate the merits of that proposal. There are many reasons why the Morgan Stanley proposal is superior to the Norfolk Southern bid. Let me highlight just a few.

First, a stand alone Conrail under Morgan Stanley will not present the huge antitrust and anticompetitive problems caused by a merger with the Norfolk Southern. This is especially important to Western and Midwestern States because a stand alone Conrail will not harm our railroads through traffic diversions and monopolistic practices. I am prepared to offer an amendment to the Norfolk Southern proposal which will correct some of these problems, but a stand alone Conrail would be a far superior solution to the problem.

Second, Morgan Stanley provides more money for the Federal Government. My distinguished colleague from Missouri seems to agree with this point, but says that the amount of return to the Government is really a secondary issue. He emphasizes Norfolk Southern's "deep pockets" and questions the viability of a stand alone Conrail. I will speak on that subject later, but let me say now that the issue of Conrail's viability was resolved long ago by the private markets. The Morgan Stanley bid represents many highly sophisticated investors throughout the country who are much better qualified to answer this question than either the Senate or the Department of Transportation.

But while on the one hand the distinguished floor manager argues that the return to the Federal Government is a secondary issue, he argues on the other that we must move forward on this issue now if we are serious about reducing the Federal deficit and complying with Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. Mr. President, you cannot have it both ways. I would say to my colleagues that if they are truly concerned about the Federal deficit, they should support the Morgan Stanley proposal because it clearly represents a larger return to the Federal Treasury and a real reduction in the deficit.

That leads me to the third issue of taxes. In addition to the $200 million extra cash offered by Morgan Stanley, the CBO estimates that Morgan Stanley represents an additional $400 million in tax savings to the Federal Government.

Finally, the Morgan Stanley proposal is far superior to the Norfolk Southern proposal in its treatment of labor. Mr. President, Norfolk Southern and its supporters argue that their proposal represents a better deal for labor. Well, without even discussing the differences between the two proposals this issue is easily resolved by listening to the labor organizations. Every major labor organization in my State and around the country is adamant in its opposition to Norfolk Southern and very firm in its support of the Morgan Stanley alternative. I believe that labor itself is in the best position to determine what is best for the workers represented by the different organizations.

Mr. President, on all these points—on competition and regional railroad concerns, on the budgetary issue, on the tax issue, and on the labor issue—the record speaks for itself. The Morgan Stanley proposal is clearly the superior offer. I hope we will have an up or down vote on the merits of this issue and not get bogged down in some procedural motion to send this back to committee. Further, I strongly urge my colleagues to vote for the Morgan Stanley alternative to Norfolk Southern. As a member of the Commerce Committee who has been deeply involved in this issue, I am not prepared to say that Morgan Stanley is the perfect solution, but I can safely say that it is miles and miles ahead of the Norfolk Southern bid when looked at from both a transportation policy and a public interest perspective.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the fiscal condition of our country and the existence of our new Emergency Budget Act, known as Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is causing almost everyone to attempt to use the Budget Act, as amended by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, to block anything they do not want to let happen around here.

I, first of all, would like to say that I believe, from the standpoint of the law, I know as much about Gramm-Rudman-Hollings as anyone. In fact, I can attest to being responsible for at least 50 clarifying amendments that occurred from the first time the Senate voted the bill in until we finally passed it. All of these amendments were crafted to make it more workable, to make it better, and to make sure it accomplished what we intended. Frankly, I have looked carefully at this issue and I find nothing in the so-called Gramm-Rudman-Hollings amendments to the original Budget Act that has anything to do with the issue that is before us.

There may be some who want to argue—and hopefully they will do it as a matter of substance—that they have a better plan and, therefore, we would accomplish some better result. I do not agree with that either. But, if they would like to say the Federal Government can get a better deal another way and, since the objective of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is fiscal restraint, let us go with another approach, that is fine.

But, from the standpoint of the waiver that is sought here, this has been in the Budget Act since it was enacted in 1974. The 303 point of order that was raised against the original Conrail bill, as it was introduced, was a provision in law before Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, and it remains in law after it. The distinguished chairman of the Commerce Committee, who seeks a waiver and will ask us to vote on it, seeks a waiver on a provision that was there from the beginning, long before the Emergency Budget Act Amendments. Section 303 remains in place as I understand it, in the same manner that it was before, as far as the point of order raised yesterday is concerned.

You do not put a waiver provision in a law like the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act just to have it there. You put it there because, from time to time, the occasion will arise when this institution, the U.S. Senate, has to make a decision whether it wants to waive something or not. I think we put the waiver provision in the original Budget Act precisely for this kind of bill.

First of all, everyone in this institution knows that the bill that is pending has attached to it, as the subject matter for this U.S. Senate, the proposal that we are going to vote on; and the technical budget violations are not there at all, even without a waiver, when we get around to voting on the amendment that the distinguished chairman will ask the U.S. Senate to vote on. So, in a very real sense, not only is the objection technical, but, in another sense, when we get around to voting, even the technical ones will be gone, as I understand it. So, frankly, I would urge that, unless one wants to use technical aspects of the Budget Act to avoid a vote at all and somehow feel that we are going to dispose of this Conrail issue under the Budget Act and just not vote on the substance, if that is what somebody wants the Senate to do, then, obviously, they ought to find that it violates the Budget Act and not go along with the chairman's request that we waive.

I do not come down here very often and say, "Let's waive the Budget Act." In fact, for a number of years, I only did one or two as chairman of the Budget Committee. But, frankly, this one, it seems to me, fits the bill; that is why it is in there, and we ought to waive and get on with the substantive business.

Let me raise one other point. Frankly, budget resolutions are not perfect documents. Obviously, there is no line itemization. Even when you make serious assumptions in a budget resolution, nobody can say they are binding.

But, clearly, the U.S. Senate voted on an assumption that Conrail would be disposed of and we voted that up or down and we were substantially in favor of disposing of it. And, on the receipts side of the ledger, it was assumed that the U.S. Treasury would receive a substantial amount of money from the sale of it and, thus, reduce the deficit.

Now, some might want to argue that there is another way to do it and you might reduce the deficit more. I say, let us have at that debate. If there is another proposal that does better at that, let us get it up and let us vote on it. Maybe it is Morgan Stanley; maybe it is something else.

But, clearly, the budget resolution, at the very minimum, contemplates the disposal of Conrail with some substantial net gain to the Government of the United States. And to now say we should not vote at all because there is a technical provision in the Budget and Impoundment Control Act that will permit us to avoid it, and to try to say that it is in the spirit of the budget resolution or it is good fiscal policy or it accommodates to Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, let me just say I do not believe that. I do not think that is the case and I urge that we not do it. For those who would like to delay things indefinitely, I think that is their prerogative. I do not want to be part of them—doing it by talking about Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, some technical thing in the Budget Act, because I do not think that is either what it was, what the Budget Act is, or intends for us to do.

I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I would be pleased to yield for a question.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thought I was just recognized for the floor. I was recognized for the floor. I wonder if I can have an opportunity to respond to my colleague from New Mexico while he is still here. I am afraid he may be leaving us.

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not control the floor, and the Senator does not control me. So I may not be here in any event. But I will be glad to listen.

Mr. METZENBAUM. If the Senator from Missouri does not mind my proceeding at this point.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I would be happy for the Senator from Ohio to proceed. I have a couple of clarifying questions I wanted to ask the Senator from New Mexico. They are only clarifying. I could ask him now or wait.

Mr. METZENBAUM. If the Senator would be good enough to let me respond, I would appreciate it very much.

Let me say I am a little disappointed at my chairman. I am a member of that Budget Committee which he chairs, and does so ably, so well. I am a little disappointed that he is here saying this is a technical question.

First of all, there is not any doubt about it. My point of order is well taken. Let me read to my colleagues the exchange that occurred the other day.

Therefore, Mr. President, I raise a point of order that the bill violates section 303 of the Budget Act as amended by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

It was never actually acted upon by the Chair because the Senator from Missouri immediately moved to waive.

Subsequently, I then said:

I will pose a parliamentary inquiry to the Parliamentarian or the Chair. Is it not the fact that, had there not been a motion to waive the rule, the Senator from Ohio's point of order would have been well taken?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Since the bill affects revenues in a fiscal year for which there is no concurrent resolution on the budget, the bill would violate section 303 of the Budget Act.

I do not think there is any question that this is a violation of the provisions that we have written into law with respect to the Budget Act, and that Budget Act as amended by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. But I think it is important that we just not think of it in a technical sense but that we understand what the numbers are because when this matter was before the Budget Committee, it was indicated that there would be $1.2 billion in revenues, that that would be income.

That just is not the fact, and the chairman of the Budget Committee will recollect that at that time I raised a question with him about that subject. He said we would get to that matter at a later point. We did not get to that matter. But since that time, through an exchange of letters, the chairman of the Commerce Committee has been advised by the Treasury that there would be a loss of $174 million with a present value of $125 million if this bill were to become law.

Second, the CBO has provided us with their own figures. The CBO has indicated that there would be a loss of not $174 million, but $400 million in tax revenue, and that there would be an additional foregoing of $800 million in repayment of the debt plus interest. As a matter of fact, if we did not, the United States would receive $300 million in 1987, $300 million in 1988, and $300 million in 1989, according to CBO, although I think I overstated by a very small amount the full $300 million. I think it is slightly less than that.

So we are not talking about a technical matter. We are talking about a very real matter. We are talking about violating the budget as the first act of the U.S. Senate of any significance. Everybody is talking about Gramm-Rudman-Hollings: What are we going to do about it? How are we going to operate under it? What a problem. What a challenge. Will it affect defense spending? Will we have to pass a tax bill? Will we have to do any one of a host of other things? The chairman of the Budget Committee is one of the loudest voices—and I do not mean loud in a pejorative term, but I mean he is a spokesperson on that issue—and is very much concerned.

So to hear him come to the floor and say he supports the waiver of the Budget Act is disturbing. It is disturbing to me as a member of the Budget Committee, and it is disturbing to me as if it were a matter of a player on a team. The ball game would not be over if the motion of the Senator from Missouri is turned down. What would then happen, I assume, is that the Secretary of Transportation would then take new bid proposals, and everybody would be on the same basis.

The Senator from New Mexico is certainly aware of the fact that there is out there another bid which has $200 million in additional revenues available to us. Two hundred million dollars may not be much money in the overall scheme of balancing the budget, but I think he and I would both agree that $200 million is a lot of money, and I do not think there is any great secret about it; that I think Morgan Stanley bidders are prepared to increase that figure when and if they are prodded and pushed to do so.

I do not have much doubt in my mind that Norfolk Southern would be prepared to increase their figures, and well they might. What a steal they have gotten here. What a giveaway. For $1.2 billion I have never heard of a deal where you buy $800 million in cash—$800 million in cash for a purchase price of $1.2 billion. You also get $250 million in surplus funds in the pension fund, and although there are some restraints about using that immediately, there are no restraints about using it long-rangewise. You also get the right to depreciate $3.5 billion in capital assets—$3.5 billion in capital assets. You get a company that made $450 million last year.

So to say that this is technical is to belie the facts because the facts are that this is a very, very bad deal. I would say that this is not even a fire sale. There is a giving away of one of the finest assets we have.

The President of the United States wrote us the other day, and indicated it is time for us to quit—I think the word was subsidizing or continuing to keep going with Conrail. It is time for us to get out of the business. Conrail has been a profitmaker in 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984, and 1985. In 1981, it made $39 million; in 1982, it made $174 million; in 1983, it earned $315 million; in 1984, it earned $500 million; and, in 1985, after paying both real estate and State taxes as well as paying some adjustments on payroll retroactively, it still earned $440 million.

So for the chairman of the Budget Committee to be saying to our colleagues that it is just a technical issue and that we ought to go forward and waive the budget is not wrong. It is disappointing.

It is disappointing that he is the one who is here making that statement.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am sorry what I have said disappoints the distinguished Senator. He is a member of the Budget Committee. I do not seek to disappoint him or anyone.

Let me repeat. Almost all of his arguments, even if they are valid, as I see it, deserve to be considered by the U.S. Senate. Perhaps they should have already been considered by us. We have been down here 2 weeks on the issue. If his eloquence prevails, we should turn down this sale and perhaps adopt another one. But it does not change my mind one bit with reference to using the Budget Act in a technical violation to cause us to abort this and start over or to say we should not proceed with a proposition that has been in the mill since 1981 as a direct mandate, that was preceded by the $7 billion of taxpayers' money.

The distinguished Senator talks about this as if these people who are managing Conrail have just done this magnificent job. I think almost anyone could make this a wonderful railroad if they had $7 billion of taxpayers' money to start with.

So it is time to get rid of it and say to them, "Thank you, you have done a marvelous job, but we do not think we want to gamble with you anyone. We put you on your feet. Now let us get this railroad out from under the continued subsidization potential which has already seen $7 billion go in to save this corridor."

It has magnificent equipment, everybody says, as if the current management should say, "We did all of that."

Of course, the taxpayers did it. Management buys pure gold when they buy it. They do not buy anything second rate.

It has nothing to do with the Budget Act. It has nothing to do with the budget resolution.

If you do not want to sell it and you agree with Senator METZENBAUM, vote no when we vote. If you want to do the Morgan Stanley one, let somebody offer it. You can offer any deals down here. There is nothing precluding that. If someone wants to preclude the sale of it and say it cannot be sold until this and this, let them offer that.

I believe we will be here another week or 2 weeks. Is that correct, I ask the chairman?

Mr. DANFORTH. Perhaps another day.

Mr. DOMENICI. None of those arguments of my friend change my mind on the technical aspects. I am here to listen to the substance. He has made some good arguments.

Mr. DANFORTH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I appreciate the remarks of the chairman of the Budget Committee. It is my understanding from his remarks that the chairman does support waiver of the Budget Act in this very technical case and that the chairman does intend to vote to waive the Budget Act.

Mr. DOMENICI. I support it and I will vote aye.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, one further question. Last year when the Budget Committee was meeting on the budget resolution and then the budget resolution was on the floor of the Senate, did we not at that time contemplate precisely the sale that is now before the U.S. Senate?

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator is correct. The distinguished chairman of the committee is correct. We assumed it, as I indicated in my opening remarks, and we put in a number on the receipt side that recommended the best estimate of the sale that is contemplated. As I indicated, all we do is make those kinds of assumptions.

Mr. DANFORTH. Right. However, if we vote no on the budget waiver, is not the practical effect of that vote to pull down this bill and to, in effect, say that we are not going to sell this railroad to anyone?

Mr. DOMENICI. I believe it is. I said that a few minutes ago. Frankly, I am not one to predict the way we get things done because sometimes only God knows how we get things done, it is so complicated. Basically, I believe those who do not want the waiver granted would paint a scenario in terms of what they have accomplished, which is that the bill would be pulled and we would be pulled and we would be back to ground zero or the start over point. If that is what you are asking, I believe so. Nothing will happen, in my opinion, for a long, long time.

Mr. DANFORTH. I appreciate the comments of the chairman of the Budget Committee.

Mr. SPECTER. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. DANFORTH. May I propound a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. SPECTER. I would like to ask a few questions of Senator DOMENICI before he leaves the Chamber.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the rollcall vote on the Danforth motion to waive the Budget Act with respect to Senate consideration of S. 638 occur at 2:30 p.m. today and that the time between 1 p.m. and 2:30 p.m. be equally divided and controlled between Senator DANFORTH and Senator METZENBAUM.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HOLLINGS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Did the Senator from Pennsylvania wish to be recognized?

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have just worked it out with the distinguished Senator from New Mexico to have a colloquy this afternoon. I will not proceed at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer.

Mr. President, we support very strongly Senator DANFORTH's motion to waive the Budget Act. The fundamental issue involved here is the affectation of revenues during a particular fiscal year. The report that the Chair relied upon in making its ruling is dated June 1985. That is when we in the Commerce Committee made our report on this particular bill and we included the effect of revenues with respect to the 1986 fiscal year. The concurrent resolution for the budget for 1986 has been passed and is now in course.

On page 25 of that particular report it states:

> The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates revenue losses to the Federal Government of approximately $1 billion annually from 1987 through 1990 as a result of a sale to Norfolk Southern. The Joint Committee on Taxation has indicated that as more information becomes available, revisions may be necessary. The Congressional Budget Office has reviewed and concurs with these revenue estimates.

So, in one interpretation, yes, the revenue impact, the use of taxation, would not take place until 1987. That would be the first year, and the Chair's ruling is on target. But the general thrust of the provision of section 303 of the Budget Act—and, incidentally, I'm speaking as a cosponsor of the Budget Act as well as a cosponsor of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings—is to take the real effect of revenues with respect to that fiscal year in the main. In other words, in 1986. When the Commerce Committee reported the Conrail bill in the summer of 1985, we hoped it would pass the Senate before Christmas. In fact, many people were talking about adjourning by September 30. History has been made and we did not get through anything, practically, other than our setting of the debt limit and the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings amendments to the Budget Act, which did not substantially affect section 303. Gramm-Rudman-Hollings never affected section 303 in any major fashion. It was never discussed. It was never intended to affect it. All of the discussions with the distinguished chairman of our Budget Committee, who handled most of the amendments when it went to conference and brought back the conference agreement, never bore on the fundamentals of section 303. So Gramm-Rudman-Hollings has nothing to do with it.

But in essence, we have been delayed. That is why we come into that 1987 provision there. It is a technical thing with respect to someone trying to make the point—well, what about 1988? If they take a tax loss in 1988, do we have to come back and get another waiver? What about 1989 or 1990? Do we have to get another waiver for those years because our language relied upon for the ruling says all those years? The distinguished Chair advises that 303 provides for the first year and the first year alone.

I only emphasize this part of it to bring into focus that there are no monkeyshines going on with respect to the Conrail bill now before the Senate.

I think our distinguished chairman, Senator DANFORTH, has proposed the right solution, for us to get an up or down vote for the waiver, because that very act also provides for the waiver. I do not know of a more typical, or perhaps I should say needed kind of provision for that waiver—"use" for it is the word I am seeking—than at the present time, where you overlap in the particular fiscal year. We are not trying to get ahead of the year 1987. We are in step with the fiscal year 1986.

Conrail was discussed. The idea there in section 303, that you bring up a matter never before the Budget Committee itself, never discussed, never debated, never acted upon, and all of a sudden, out of the blue, try to effect a fiscal year revenue or taxation loss or gain, one way or the other, without any kind of treatment during that fiscal year—that treatment has been had ad infinitum into 1986 itself, way past the beginning of the fiscal year. We had not even passed reconciliation. But the spirit of section 303 has been complied with.

Here we are under the technical situation whereby they have just said, "Wait a minute, we have found this language in the report." And some sharp staffer said, "Let us raise a point of order." So we now can vote up or down if the Members, my colleagues, know the particular merits involved here. That Conrail bill has complied with it. In order to make sure of that compliance, the substitute is there. But, of course, you can see the kind of filibuster that we have here is delay, delay, delay. In fact, we would have brought this up last fall had we not been faced with all these different kinds of motions, delays, and things of that kind.

As a cosponsor of the Budget Act of 1974 and that section 303 and as a cosponsor of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, I say they are very much reconcilable. They are not irreconcilable. The truth is that Gramm-Rudman-Hollings did not substantively affect this 303 section. Nobody should be complaining about the requirements of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings on this score.

Of course, they are going to be blaming everything on it. I jokingly said at one meeting before Christmas that by next spring they will be blaming Gramm-Rudman-Hollings for giving people AIDS. I went out to Washington National Airport to go home for Christmas and there were some demonstrators displaying signs which said exactly that. I did not bother to stop to find out what they were complaining about. But that is exactly what they had on their signs. So they did not wait until spring. They had it at the Christmas holidays when we were leaving town. They will blame everything on it.

We will get into the debates to try to adhere to the discipline set by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, but let us not try to compare Gramm-Rudman-Hollings and its discipline with the discipline of section 303, which has been adhered to. This is just overlapping a couple of years.

You can assume in a purchase of this kind that there are tax benefits going, let us say, to Norfolk Southern. That is not an unreasonable assumption, but it is an assumption. And Norfolk Southern did state, yes, they would take the tax benefits in 1987.

But what about Morgan-Stanley's proposal? Now, that is a leverage buyout. They will take the tax benefits right away, Mr. President, I can tell you that. They will take them in 1986. They will bring me into compliance with section 303 without question. That is exactly the Morgan Stanley presentation and offer for the purchase of Conrail—just a leverage buyout and get all the tax benefits and losses they possibly can. They tried to bring out a little article they had about fourth-quarter increase in earnings. The truth is they started the fiscal year on tax benefits—Conrail did in 1985—with some $856 million. They only made $56 million. That is not any of the benefits. They merely dipped into this capital in order to maintain and their revenues were 2 percent over 1985 earnings, or a 2-percent dimunution or loss in revenues.

Conrail is going out of business. The distinguished chairman of CSX testified on many occasions exactly what is occurring—That an independent Conrail could not sustain itself without all kinds of Government money going to it. And since Conrail had started, as we all know, they have closed down some 5,000 miles.

In fact, they have gone from 19,000 down to about 14,000 miles. They have let go some 59,000 employees. They have planned now, have on course, another layoff of 5,000 employees and an abandonment of 4,500 additional miles.

So, as it is going out of business, the question before Congress is, How do we maintain this service, protect the financial interests of the Government, and more than anything else, protect the railroad itself and its service to the American public? We have only one company that has come forward with the interest and ability to continue Conrail. They have the money, they have an interest to invest the money, and they have an interest in the continuation of Conrail's service. That company is Norfolk Southern.

So, Mr. President, I hope my colleagues understand that this upcoming vote is a part of a technical maneuver. We are going through filibusters, clotures, and everything else to get to the meat of the coconut. We will continue and will not give up.

This is not a well-taken point at all on this upcoming vote about the budget and not complying with the budget, the spirit of the law or otherwise. It has just been stated by one of the proponents that we have yet to vote, that yes, we would use the tax benefits, but that is not to say it is going to them. If you ask Morgan-Stanley, they would start using the tax benefits and they are probably writing off the cost of the proposal right now, the tax benefits in 1986, if I know anything about lawyers and I have been at the bar 40 years almost. I think I know a little bit about that crowd. The benefits are now being taken in 1986.

We made this report in the middle of 1985. We discussed it in the resolution, debated it extensively before the Budget Committee—which is really the requirement in section 303—and the consideration has been full. I hope we can sustain the Danforth motion.

I thank the distinguished chairman.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I am going to make some remarks. It is now 1 minute to 1. We are under a time agreement beginning at 1 o'clock, so I ask unanimous consent to yield myself as much time as I require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HECHT). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, first, let us face up to what the vote is going to be at 2:30. The vote at 2:30 is whether or not we are going to sell Conrail to anyone. That is the vote. It appears as a procedural vote, it appears as a very technical vote on a waiver of the Budget Act. But the substance of the vote is whether we are going to sell Conrail to anyone.

Mr. President, it has also seemed to me that there are three alternatives that are before the U.S. Senate.

One alternative is to sell Conrail to Norfolk Southern. That is the recommendation of the administration after very long study. That is the recommendation of the Commerce Committee which had extensive hearings into the subject. That is the bill that is on the floor. That is the Danforth substitute for the bill. Sell it to Norfolk Southern. That is one option.

The second alternative is to sell Conrail to the public, a stand-alone Conrail. That is the Morgan Stanley suggestion. There will be an amendment, assuming that we prevail on the waiver of the Budget Act, which will be offered, I believe, by Senator SPECTER to agree to the Morgan Stanley transaction. Morgan Stanley is an underwriter. It has put together an underwriting group, and it would acquire Conrail and then resell it to the general public. That would create a stand-alone Conrail. Some people believe that is a good idea. I do not.

But, Mr. President, the third alternative is to do nothing, to keep Conrail as it is. The third alternative is not to sell it at all. The third alternative is to say that when we passed the Northeast Rail Services Act in 1981 stating that we were going to sell Con-rail, we had our fingers crossed. The third alternative is to say that those who negotiated in good faith with Uncle Sam, some 15 prospects who wanted to buy Conrail, negotiated in vain; that when the U.S. Congress says we are going to go through with the deal, we do not mean it.

That is the third option—do not sell it to anybody.

Mr. President, who is ever going to do business with the U.S. Government again if we take that third option? The real debate, in my opinion, is between the Norfolk Southern offer and the stand-alone Conrail. We will get to that debate. But, Mr. President, those witnesses who testified before the Commerce Committee on behalf of Morgan Stanley, on behalf of Norfolk Southern, one after another, came before the Commerce Committee and said, "Sell it to one of us but don't do nothing. Don't do nothing."

Mr. President, that is the issue that is on the floor now, doing nothing. If you want to kill it, if you want to kill the bill, you can do it right now. You can kill not only the committee's bill, you can kill any sale. You can kill the Morgan Stanley deal. You can kill the bill, take it down, get it off the floor at 2:30 this afternoon. How do you do it? Vote not to waive the Budget Act. Vote not to waive the Budget Act.

That is the issue, Mr. President. This issue that we will be voting on at 2:30 is almost like a vote on final passage. Are we going to do anything at all? That is the question on which we will be voting.

Mr. President, the casting of this vote as having anything at all to do with Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is really put to rest not only by considering the fact that Senator METZENBAUM is, to say the least, a convert to the cause of defending Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, but also it is, I think, clarified by the fact that the chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, has already appeared on the floor and stated that he supported the waiver and supported the sale, and also by the fact that there is a Dear Colleague letter. All the Senators have received it in their offices and all the Senators have it on their desks today. The Dear Colleague letter, Mr. President, is signed by Senators GRAMM, RUDMAN, and HOLLINGS, and they also let me sign their letter. I want to read some excerpts from this Dear Colleague letter dated today:

Today's vote on the motion to waive section 303 of the Budget Act is a key vote on S. 638, the Conrail sale. Is Congress going to implement its 1981 decision to sell Conrail? A vote for this motion is a vote to go ahead and try to complete 5 years of work on this sale. A vote against this motion is a vote to do nothing, to keep the U.S. Government in the railroad business, and to bring into serious question the Federal Government's ability to operate as a good faith partner in any business transaction.

The letter then goes on to say, and I am skipping parts of it:

The point of order is not a Gramm-Rudman-Hollings matter, nor is it made against the sale proposal recommended by the Commerce Committee. Instead, it is a proposal to stop the sale dead in its tracks, killing for this year any chance of a Conrail sale. We believe that would be a terrible mistake.

If you support a sale to Norfolk Southern, or a sale to the Morgan-Stanley investment group, or if you simply want to permit the Senate to work its will as you make up your mind, you should vote for the waiver motion.

We urge you to do so.

The letter is signed by Senator GRAMM, Senator RUDMAN, Senator HOLLINGS, and the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this Dear Colleague letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
SCIENCE, AND TRANSPORTATION,
Washington, DC, January 29, 1986.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Today's vote on the motion to waive Section 303 of the Budget Act is a key vote on S. 638, the Conrail sale. Is Congress going to implement its 1981 decision to sell Conrail? A vote for this motion is a vote to go ahead and try to complete five years of work on this sale. A vote against this motion is a vote to do nothing, to keep the U.S. government in the railroad business, and to bring into serious question the federal government's ability to operate as a good faith partner in any business transaction.

This motion to waive the Budget Act is a response to Senator Metzenbaum's point of order raised against the text of S. 638 as it was introduced in early 1985. This text, the original DOT proposal to sell Conrail to Norfolk Southern, is outdated. It was examined and debated in four days of hearings and two days of Executive Session in the Commerce Committee. The Danforth substitute amendment, No. 1437, is the final version of the bill, containing all the Committee's recommended modifications and changes. No point of order would lie against the true sale proposal, the Danforth substitute. The point of order has been raised against the underlying original bill, which is not the focus of this debate and which has no support from anyone.

It is ironic that Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is being incorrectly invoked in support of this point of order because the sale of Conrail to either Norfolk Southern or the Morgan-Stanley investment group will raise on the order of $1.3 to $1.5 billion for the U.S. Treasury. A failure to receive these sale proceeds will only increase deficit pressures.

The point of order is not a Gramm-Rudman-Hollings matter, nor is it made against the sale proposal recommended by the Commerce Committee. Instead, it is a proposal to stop the sale dead in its tracks, killing for this year any chance of a Conrail sale. We believe that would be a terrible mistake.

If you support a sale to Norfolk Southern, or a sale to the Morgan-Stanley investment group, or if you simply want to permit the Senate to work its will as you make up your mind, you should vote for the waiver motion.

We urge you to do so.

Sincerely,

ERNEST F. HOLLINGS.
WARREN RUDMAN.
JOHN C. DANFORTH.
PHIL GRAMM.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I also have a statement by Senator RUDMAN. Senator RUDMAN says:

Mr. President, before we vote on the motion to waive Section 303 of the Budget Act with respect to consideration of the Conrail bill, I would like to clarify for my colleagues the impact of this vote on the newly-enacted Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act, more popularly known as the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings bill. On Monday, a question raised as to whether the Conrail bill is in violation of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. The assertion was that S. 638, because it has a revenue impact and because there is no current budget resolution for this fiscal year, violates Section 303 of the Budget Act as amended by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

I would like to make absolutely clear that the Conrail bill would have been subject to the same point of order raised by the Senator from Ohio—for the same reasons—had Gramm-Rudman-Hollings never been enacted.

Mr. President, the provision in Section 303 which gives rise to the point of order was not amended by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. Section 303 of the Act has always provided that it not be in order to consider a bill which, during any fiscal year, provides new budget authority, increases or decreases revenues, or increases or decreases the public debt limit, until a budget resolution for that year has been agreed to. Gramm-Rudman-Hollings did amend Section 303 by adding legislation which provides new credit authority to that list. It also provided an exception for certain appropriations bills considered in the House. Neither of these modifications in any way affect today's vote. Let me repeat, Mr. President, that Gramm-Rudman-Hollings did not amend the provision of Section 303 which subjects the Conrail bill to a point of order. Because this is the case, I would like to point out to my colleagues that the motion to waive the budget act on this vote will be decided by a simple majority—not the three-fifths vote necessary to waive a point of order under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings legislation.

In conclusion, Mr. President, it should be perfectly clear that whatever the merits of the issues presented on this procedural vote, they have nothing to do with Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. Members should vote their conscience on this vote and should not be influenced by the false allegation that waiving the Budget Act in this instance threatens the integrity of the new Deficit Control Act.

That is the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN].

Mr. President, let me take a few more minutes to respond to some comments by the Senator from Ohio.

The Senator from Ohio claims that Conrail is a moneymaking machine, pumping out its profits to the Federal Government, and that in future years, starting in 1988, Conrail is going to begin repaying its debt to Uncle Sam.

Mr. President, the U.S. Government began pumping money in Conrail in 1973. Since 1973, Conrail has cost Uncle Sam $7 billion. During that 13-year period, the amount of money that Conrail has returned to Uncle Sam is a round number—zero, not a penny. Anybody who believes that Conrail is going to be repaying its debt believes in the tooth fairy. There is no chance that debt is going to be repaid, not a chance in the world.

Whom are we fooling? Eight Northeast railroads went bankrupt, leading to the creation of Conrail, in the first place. Then Conrail was created, and we pumped in $7 billion.

The Senator from Ohio says that in the last 5 years it has been profitable. The correct version of that statement is that in 2 of the last 5 years it has been profitable; because in 1981, 1982, and 1983, when you subtract the goodies that Uncle Sam has given it, it lost money.

It made not $500 million but $285 million in 1984, and not $440 million but $269 million in 1985, when you subtract the goodies: That the Federal Government paid its labor protection; that Conrail received special benefits under NERSA—for example, wage concessions from its employees; that it was exempted from paying State taxes; that Conrail sold tax benefits and it used its tax leases; that Conrail made large property sales, including approximately $90 million worth in 1985.

So much for the profitability of Conrail. It has been a sponge.

So, Mr. President, the view of the Senator from Missouri is let us get rid of the thing. If you want to get rid of it to the general public—that is the Morgan Stanley proposal—OK. I do not agree with it, but OK. If you want to get rid of it by selling it to Norfolk Southern, good. But let us get rid of this thing.

This is not any profit-making operation. This is a sponge that has sopped up $7 billion in Federal money since 1973. It has never returned a penny.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, with the time to be charged equally between the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, my statement is a detailed analysis of certain aspects of the proposed sale of Conrail which were raised by the Senator from Ohio. According to the Senator from Ohio, the proposed sale represents a "special" tax deal for Norfolk Southern in two respects.

First, it is asserted that Norfolk Southern gets a special benefit because the memorandum of intent provides that the cancellation of the Conrail debt held by the United States will not result in the recognition of income. Simply put, the Senator from Ohio is wrong if he believes that under our tax laws the proposed cancellation of the Conrail debt is a taxable event. In fact, our tax laws specifically provide that the cancellation of the debt of a corporation held by its shareholder is not a taxable event. This is the legal conclusion of the Department of the Treasury.

Second, the Senator from Ohio refers to several provisions of the memorandum of intent in which the United States makes specific representations and warranties concerning the adjusted tax basis of Conrail's assets. According to the Senator from Ohio, special benefits to Norfolk Southern are its contractual rights under the memorandum of intent which permit it to cover damages from the United States in the event the United States, albeit inadvertently, misrepresented important facts relied upon by Norfolk Southern. In my opinion, these provisions are not special benefits. Rather, these provisions contain reasonable representations and warranties bargained for by the parties in good faith. The provisions reflect sound business policies on the part of both Norfolk Southern and the United States.

Mr. President, this past Tuesday the Senator from Ohio raised a number of concerns relating to the Federal income tax consequences of the proposed sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern. In my opinion, the Federal income tax aspects of the proposed sale are perhaps the most misunderstood and the most misrepresented issues stemming from the sale of Conrail. I have stated repeatedly that the two principal questions facing the Senate with respect to Conrail are whether Conrail should be sold, and, if so, to whom. In response to these questions, I have clearly stated that it is time to end the Federal Government's ownership of Conrail, and that the best available purchaser for Conrail is Norfolk Southern.

Notwithstanding these principal issues, the Senator from Ohio and others are attempting to sidetrack us. I will not assert that the Federal income tax consequences of the proposed sale should not be considered in evaluating the Norfolk Southern bid for Conrail. Quite the contrary. My rule of thumb on this issue has been that the proposed sale to Norfolk Southern should not produce any Federal income tax consequences that materially differ from the consequences arising from a similar sale of stock between two nongovernmental entities. With the sole exception of the relinquishment of net operating loss and investment tax carryforwards—benefits which accrue entirely to the United States—the proposed sale of Conrail does not include any tax or contractual provisions which are substantively different than the tax or contractual rights that would be included in a similar transaction with a party other than the Federal Government.

Today I will address the specific tax points raised by the Senator from Ohio on Tuesday. Tomorrow I will probably be doing the same thing on additional tax points raised by the Senator from Ohio or by someone else. Hopefully, by the time the Conrail bill comes to a final vote, we will have resolved the confusion on the tax issues and will vote on the merits of the principal issue of how to best provide for the future of a nongovernmentally owned Conrail.

Specifically, the Senator from Ohio stated that the provisions of paragraph 4 of the "Memorandum of Intent"— > * * * means that the $800 million Conrail debt from which Norfolk Southern will be excused will not be recognized as income to Norfolk Southern. Therefore, Norfolk Southern will not have to pay taxes on it. This is not normal tax procedure.

The Senator from Ohio is incorrect. I am unaware of any party, other than the Senator from Ohio, who has seriously raised the possibility that Norfolk Southern would recognize income from the proposed cancellation of the debt of Conrail. Any such implication is clearly not normal tax procedure.

What is normal tax procedure under these circumstances? Generally, the cancellation of debt of a corporation results in the recognition of taxable income by the corporation in an amount equal to the debt canceled. This rule does not apply however, to the cancellation of the debt held by a shareholder provided that the shareholder's basis in the debt is not less than the face amount of the debt.

The proposed cancellation of the debt of Conrail held by the United States falls squarely within the scope of this nonrecognition of income rule. Thus, the cancellation of debt, because it would occur at a time when the United States is a shareholder of Conrail, would not result in the recognition of income by Conrail. Morever, under no conceivable scenario would it result in the recognition of income by Norfolk Southern. A letter dated March 27, 1985, from Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for Tax Policy,

Ronald A. Pearlman, reaches precisely this conclusion. The letter states:

Under the substantive principles described above, Conrail would not recognize income from the cancellation of its debt if such cancellation were treated as a contribution to its capital by the Federal Government.

Even if we were to assume, solely for the sake of argument, that the cancellation of Conrail's debt would result in the recognition of income by Conrail, the practical effect of such an assumption would be nil. It is clear that the cancellation would occur prior to the sale of the Conrail stock and thus the full amount of Conrail's net operating loss carryforward would be available to offset the income from the cancellation of debt. Thus, treating the canceled debt as income would not result in any increase in tax revenues to the United States under any reasonable scenario. The provisions of the "Memorandum of Intent" merely confirm the result otherwise dictated by law—a result that could also be confirmed by obtaining a private letter ruling from the IRS.

The Senator from Ohio also takes objection to the provisions of paragraph 4 which eliminate Conrail's net operating loss and investment tax credit carryforward as of the closing. The Senator refers to an exception which provides that such carryforward will remain available to the extent they are attributable solely to reductions required by the IRS in the adjusted tax basis of Conrail's assets as reported in Conrail's tax return for the year ending on the closing. These provisions complement another provision of the "Memorandum of Intent" where the U.S. Government represents and warrants to Norfolk Southern that the adjusted basis at closing of Conrail's depreciable or amortizable assets shall be as shown on its tax return for the year ending on the closing.

The Senator from Ohio states that these provisions are special provisions. To the extent "special" implies that the result of the provisions are contractual rights that differ substantively or materially from the rights Norfolk Southern would negotiate from a nongovernmental seller of a corporation, I strongly disagree with the Senator from Ohio. To the extent "special" means that the provisions reflect the reality that the Federal Government is a party to the "Memorandum of Intent," I agree with the characterization.

What are the effects of the provisions referred to earlier? They are simple: The provisions insure that Norfolk Southern obtains that which it has bargained for. In determining the amount of its bid for Conrail, Norfolk Southern reviewed the tax characteristics of Conrail as they were made available to Norfolk Southern and other prospective bidders, and factored these considerations into its bid. Norfolk Southern then requested and received a representation and warranty from the Federal Government to the effect that the adjusted tax basis in Conrail's assets is as had been represented prior to entering into the "Memorandum of Intent." This is not a special provision. This is not a unique provision. It is precisely the type of assurance that any knowledgeable buyer would require from a seller in a transaction of this type.

The next question, therefore, is: What are the consequences of a breach of this representation; that is, what rights does Norfolk Southern have under the warranty?

In a contract between two nongovernmental entities, the buyer would be entitled to money damages. The amount of the money damages would be equal to the tax benefit lost to the buyer as a result of the adjusted tax basis being less than the amount represented.

The amount of damages to Norfolk Southern should be precisely the same as the hypothetical buyer I just described. Accordingly, the "Memorandum of Intent" permits Norfolk Southern to sue the United States in the event the adjusted basis in Conrail's assets is less than represented. The "memorandum of Intent" also specifically defines the amount of damages Norfolk Southern could obtain, and that amount is precisely equal to the damages the hypothetical buyer would be entitled to recover. Thus, in short, these provisions reflect only normal contractual rights and responsibilities and nothing more.

I am sure that the Senator from Ohio will point out that the "memorandum of Intent" contains a different remedy if the IRS determines, as a result of an audit of Conrail, that the adjusted basis of Conrail's assets is less than as represented by the Government. In this case, Norfolk Southern could not sue for damages, but instead would be entitled to use a portion of Conrail's otherwise foregone net operating loss carryforwards.

According to the Senator from Ohio, this is a special benefit which accrues to Norfolk Southern. This is not the case. Rather, the facts are to the contrary. Norfolk Southern would be substantially better off if allowed to collect money damages from the United States. This provision bestows benefits only on the United States—and to the detriment of Norfolk Southern. The reason for this is that Conrail's ability to use such net operating loss carryforwards is restricted under the separate return limitation year rules in the consolidated return regulations, whereas the same restrictions do not apply to Conrail's ability to use the depreciation deductions which it will lose as a result of a misrepresentation by the United States of Conrail's adjusted basis in its assets.

In summary, Mr. President, I want to reiterate the statement that the Department of Transportation and the Department of the Treasury have repeatedly made with respect to the proposed sale of Conrail. That statement is that the proposed deal confers no special tax benefits on Norfolk Southern. Except for the loss of the carryforwards, the tax results to Norfolk Southern are the same under this deal as they would be under any similar transaction between two nongovernmental parties.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum with the provision that it be charged equally to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STAFFORD). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may need.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, my distinguished colleague from Missouri just said that I was wrong in indicating that cancellation of a debt is not income to the shareholders. That very likely may be the fact. But cancellation of a debt owed by a corporation is income to the corporation because what happens is the corporation 1 day owes, let us say, $1 billion. If the next day it does not owe $1 billion, then it has an income item that has to show up somewhere.

The fact is, as I understand the tax laws, that would otherwise be income to the corporation, and it would be taxable income. I am not prepared to debate the tax laws of this country with my colleague. But I do believe that when he talks about it not being income to the shareholders, that very well may be the fact. But I do believe that it is probably income to the corporation absent the warranty that is provided for in the memorandum of agreement.

I respect the chairman of the Finance Committee when he spoke the other day, but I just would like to make some clarifications because I do not think that he was fully knowledgeable as to exactly what the situation is as it pertains to this particular transaction.

On March 1, I released a letter from the Joint Committee on Taxation describing the special tax treatments of this sale. At that time I publicly stated that this sale would possibly be the largest tax shelter in history. I stand by that statement.

There are 12 provisions in the memorandum of intent, and in the bill that pays special, favorable tax treatment to Norfolk Southern.

Mr. President, I do not intend to use the time that I have allotted to me to spell out each of the 12 provisions.

First. The amounts which the Federal Government contributed to the capital of Conrail in the form of loans and preferred stock will not be considered income to Conrail when canceled despite Internal Revenue Code provisions which may reach a contrary result.

Page 4, paragraph (e)(i):

(e) TAX MATTERS.—(i) The cancellation by seller on the date of closing of any interest of seller in any debt, including accrued interest thereon, and preferred stock, including accrued and unpaid dividends thereon, of Conrail held by seller (or any agent or instrumentality thereof) shall not result in the recognition of gross income for purposes of the code.

Second. The IRS may adjust the tax value—basis—of Conrail's assets prior to closing, but Norfolk Southern shall retain a carryforward equal to the amount of any such reduction in the tax value of said assets.

Page 3, paragraph 4(ii):

(ii) That Conrail's net operating loss carryforwards shall not be available for carryover to taxable years beginning on or after the closing (except to the extent such carryforwards are attributable solely to reductions required by the IRS in the adjusted tax basis of Conrail's depreciable or amortizable assets as reflected in its U.S. corporation income tax return (Form 1120) for the taxable year ending on the closing.)

Third. Upon audit the IRS may not adjust the tax value—basis—of Conrail's assets after closing.

Page 4, paragraph 6(3)(ii):

. . . the adjusted basis at closing of Conrail's (and its affiliates') depreciable or amortizable assets shall be as shown on its U.S. corporation income tax return (Form 1120) for the taxable year ending on the closing determined without extraordinary departures from the methods of prior years and said basis as of closing shall not thereafter be increased or decreased as a result of any adjustment to a taxable year of Conrail (or any affiliate) ending on or before the closing;

Page 3, paragraph 4(iii):

. . . That the adjusted tax basis of Conrail's assets shall not be increased by any adjustment to a taxable year ending on or before the closing.

Fourth. The IRS shall not find that Conrail realized gain on the sale of its stock.

Page 4, paragraph 6(e)(iii):

(III) No gain or loss or income shall be recognized by buyer or Conrail upon a sale of shares to buyer (or the resulting change in control of Conrail) except in the event buyer makes, or is deemed to have made, an election under section 338 of the code;

Fifth. The IRS shall not reduce the tax value of Conrail's assets from $3 to $1.2 billion (as required under section 338) if Conrail property is transferred to Norfolk Southern.

Page 4, paragraph 6(E) (III), (IV), (IV)(B):

(III) No gain or loss or income shall be recognized by buyer or Conrail upon a sale of the shares to buyer (or the resulting change in control of Conrail) except in the event buyer makes, or is deemed to have made, an election under section 338 of the code. For the purpose of clauses (III) and (IV), buyer shall not be deemed to have made an election under section 338 of the code in connection with the sale of the shares to buyer (or any affiliate) or Conrail (or any affiliate) that would otherwise trigger the application of section 338(E)(I) of the code provided that (B) buyer (and its affiliates) elects under conditions to be agreed upon that the basis of such assets in their hands immediately following such acquisitions shall not exceed the basis of such assets in the hands of the seller of such assets immediately before such acquisition.

Sixth. Amounts paid to employees after closing, in order to increase wages to the industry standard, and amounts paid for routing concessions, shall be immediately deducted rather than amortized. (Written off over a longer period).

(E) Closing agreement; rulings and representations. Conrail and the IRS shall have entered into the closing agreement described in paragraph 4; and buyer shall have received (at seller's sole election) either a ruling of the Internal Revenue Service or a written representation and warranty of seller under the provisions of paragraph 6(e) to the effect that the amounts paid to employees of Conrail or its affiliates for services rendered after the closing in order to increase their post-closing wages to industry standard and the costs paid or incurred for the routing concessions referred to in paragrah 12(A)(VIII) which are otherwise ordinary and necessary business expenses shall not be treated as built-in deductions and buyer and Conrail (and its affiliates) shall be entitled to deduct them when accrued or paid, such ruling or representation and warranty, as the case may be, shall be in full force and effect at and as of the closing.

Seventh. If any of the representations contained in the memorandum of intent to sell Conrail are breached by the United States, Norfolk Southern can sue in district court or the Court of Claims.

Bill section 106:

(B) Breach of representation—(1) Norfolk Southern Corp. or any successor corporation thereto—may bring suit for any breach of representations contained in paragraph 6(E) of the memorandum of intent described in section 102(20)(A) of this act (hereinafter referred to as the respresentations) in the U.S. Claims Court or a district court of the United States.

Eighth. The right to bring suit is not subject to any waiting period applicable to tax proceedings or any requirement for tax payments as a condition of bringing suit.

Bill section 106:

(B)(8) The right to bring suit pursuant to this section shall not be subject to any waiting period applicable to tax proceedings or to any requirements for payment of any tax as a condition to instituting any suit based on a breach of the representations.

Ninth. It is no defense for the United States that Norfolk Southern knew or should have known of the falsity of the representations or that there exists no carryforwards procedure as contemplated in the representations.

Bill section 106(b):

(5) It shall not be a defense to an action brought under this section that Norfolk Southern Corporation knew, or should have known, of the falsity of the representations or that there exists no carryover basis procedure as contemplated by the last sentence of the representations.

Tenth. Section 131 of the bill provides civil immunity to ESOP fiduciaries for action taken to implement the sale.

Why?

This sale plan would provide Conrail's employees a combined payment of $375 million for their 15-percent share of Conrail's stock, and for wages deferred between 1981 and 1984.

That is not enough to give a fair price for the shares owned by the ESOP.

The value of the ESOP, calculated on the basis of the amount Norfolk Southern is paying the Government per share of stock, is $212 million. Add to that the deferred wages of about $290 million per year between 1981 and 1984, and the total comes to $502 million, not including interest.

If you add in interest on the deferred wages compounded at a conservative rate of 10 percent, the total amount comes to $762 million.

The Norfolk Southern $375 million figure shortchanges the employees by $387 million.

In other words, Norfolk Southern plans to buy out Conrail's employees for less than half of what they are due.

No wonder the fiduciaries want immunity.

Eleventh. Despite the fact that the ESOP may fail to continue as a qualified retirement plan under the Tax Code, it will be deemed a qualified plan.

Section 132 of the bill:

(11)(A) The employee stock ownership plans of the corporation and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's plan shall be deemed to meet the qualification requirements of section 401 and 501, respectively, of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 notwithstanding (1) that such plans may not meet the requirements of section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Twelfth. Contributions to the ESOP shall not be treated as exceeding the maximum contribution levels imposed on every other retirement plan by the Tax Code.

Section 132 of the bill:

(11)(A) Such contributions and allocations shall in no event be treated as having exceeded the maximum annual addition permitted under section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Mr. President, if these are not special tax concessions then I see no reason why we should not strike them.

But Mr. President, there is more.

Norfolk Southern is purchasing $3.5 billion in depreciation writeoffs for $1.2 billion. And S. 638 in its current form would not prevent Norfolk Southern from using these writeoffs to shelter its income.

Mr. President, I will conclude with my last example of how S. 638 bestows privileged tax status to Norfolk Southern.

The House tax reform proposal contains an amendment to section 382 of the Tax Code that would have the result of limiting Conrail's tax writeoffs to the purchase price.

But paragraph (6)(e) of the memorandum of intent warrants that the tax basis of Conrail cannot be reduced as a result of the sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern. And section 106 of the bill permits Norfolk Southern to sue the United States if the warranty is breached.

Mr. President, we have effectively, by contract, immunized Norfolk Southern from the tax reform changes. Yet the tax reform provision provides a means to accomplish what the Secretary of Transportation promised—a way to prevent Norfolk Southern from gaining access to Conrail's tax writeoffs to shelter Norfolk Southern income.

Mr. President, this is no way to sell a railroad.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator advise as to how he wishes the time to be divided?

Mr. METZENBAUM. I thank the President. Equally divided between the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCHRAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

POSTPONEMENT OF VOTE UNTIL 2:45 P.M.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote previously scheduled for 2:30 p.m. be held at 2:45 p.m. and that the additional 15 minutes be equally divided between Senator METZENBAUM and myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, because most of the time on this debate has been consumed by quorum calls, I am concerned that I might not get not only a last inning but even a late inning. Therefore, I should like very briefly to state what I think is involved here and what is not involved.

First, what is not involved is Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. I say that, Mr. President, noting that Senator DOMENICI supports the budget waiver in this case and Senators GRAMM, RUDMAN, and HOLLINGS have signed a Dear Colleague letter supporting the budget waiver.

So this is not a budget matter, this is not a Gramm-Rudman-Hollings matter. It is purely technical.

The second point I make is that the real issue before the Senate is whether we are going to proceed with any sale of Conrail. The effect of not waiving the Budget Act in this case is that a point of order would lie and that that would be the end of the bill. Senator DOLE has said that this is it as far as Conrail is concerned; if we cannot do it now, we are not going to do it later in the year. So the question is whether we are going to sell it to anybody.

If you do not want to sell Conrail, if you want the Government to operate Conrail, then you vote against the budget waiver.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold?

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, our distinguished colleagues, Senators GRAMM, RUDMAN, and HOLLINGS, unquestionably know the specifics of their bill, and I am not prepared to debate that. The fact is that the point of order that the Senator from Ohio made was that the bill violated section 303 of the Budget Act as amended by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

The Presiding Officer said: "Since the bill affects revenues in a fiscal year for which there is no concurrent resolution on a budget, the bill would violate section 303 of the Budget Act."

They can be the authors of the legislation and I suppose you could say it did not violate Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, but it violates the Budget Act and the Parliamentarian has so determined.

Now they say, in their letter, "A point of order is not a Gramm-Rudman-Hollings matter." Well, whether it is a Gramm-Rudman-Hollings matter or a budget matter, it all comes down to the same thing: What we are talking about in Gramm-Rudman-Hollings has to do with budgetary considerations, busting the budget, losing money we otherwise would have. That is $174 million according to the Treasury—the letter was sent to the Senator from Missouri saying $174 million; $400 million according to CBO, plus $800 million that would be repayed on the outstanding obligations of Conrail to the U.S. Government.

That is real money, Mr. President. So whether they authored the legislation or not, the facts are facts and fiction is fiction.

They cannot change the facts. The facts are that if we pass this bill, this Government is going to suffer, and the Budget Act is going to be violated.

Now, they go on to say that it would be a terrible mistake and that if you do not pass this there will be no bill. That is what my colleague from Missouri says, there will be no bill.

I do not know that that is the fact. I heard Senator SPECTER say publicly, the Senator from Ohio has said publicly, what ought to be done is that the Secretary of Transportation should take new, sealed bids. There were never sealed bids taken. Never were sealed bids taken in connection with the sale of this railroad. A rather unbelievable arrangement was made. The Department of Transportation went out and they hired—I think it was Goldman Sachs, but I am not certain—somebody to come in and make an appraisal. They made an appraisal of $1.2 billion. And then what happened? Instead of then going forward and taking sealed bids, they told the whole world they had a $1.2 billion appraisal and then took bids. My recollection is they took eight bids, all of which were approximately the $1.2 billion figure. I think one of them might have been a little different.

Now, that is not the way to conduct the Federal Government's business. It is not the way to conduct the sale of property owned by the people of this country. The people of this country put $7 billion into Conrail and now we are talking about giving it away for $1.2 billion. I do not see any reason why.

In giving it away for $1.2 billion we are also giving away $800 million in cash that is in the Treasury. There is actually more cash than that in the Treasury but the deal spells out that anything in excess of that amount will be turned over to the Federal Government.

As a matter of fact, every day we discuss this matter there is more and more money going to accrue to the Federal Government because there will be more and more cash in the bank and the excess over $800 million—and there is more than $800 million now—rebounds to the benefit of the United States.

So the facts are if you figure last year's earnings of $440 million, better than a million dollars a day is accruing to the Federal Government from this railroad by reason of the fact the U.S. Senate is debating it. And so if we debated it for 2 days more, 4 days more, you would pick up that much more money.

That is obviously not an adequate reason to continue debating it, but it only serves to make the point that we are giving away a very valuable asset of the Federal Government, and we should not be doing it.

It is all right to sell it. I do not take issue with that, although you can make an argument to the contrary. But if you are going to sell it, you ought to get the best price available and not take the lowest price available. The Morgan Stanley bid is $200 million more.

It is pretty much agreed, I believe, that Morgan Stanley, if pushed to do so, would come in with a higher bid. This is a valuable asset. This is a giveaway. We are giving it away on a firesale basis. It is time that we recognize that it does not make sense. This is a revenue loser. It violates the budget.

I say to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, if you vote to waive the budget, then you ought to go back home and proudly say to your constituents, "The United States Senate has been in session now for 2 or 3 weeks and I am proud to tell you what we have accomplished in those 2 or 3 weeks. We have waived the budget in order that the Government may give away a railroad that is recognized for its quality service, for its profitmaking ability, for its efficiency. Isn't it wonderful that we waive the budget in order to give that railroad away to Norfolk and Southern?"

It does not make sense to me, and I do not think any reasonable thinking person would think it makes sense. As more and more people in this country understand what this issue is all about, more and more people will be convinced that this is a bad deal.

If it were not bad in that respect, let me tell you why it is particularly bad. It means we are going to lose 7,000 or 8,000 jobs when we are trying to keep people employed in this country; 1,200 people will lose their jobs in my State alone. Why? It will mean lesser service. It will mean lesser income to the U.S. Government. It will mean that 1,200 people will be seeking jobs that are not available in our economy at the moment. It will mean that they will go on unemployment compensation or they will go on welfare. Why would we want to do that? Why is there such a sense of excitement—we have to do this now?

We can take new bids. The Morgan Stanley bid, of which I am not an advocate, at least would not cost the jobs that this proposal would. Regardless of how you slice it, this deal does not make sense. The political pressure is on, but that does not make it right. I hope my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will see fit not to make the first important act of this year's session a waiver of the budget.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCHRAN). The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I suggest that time be charged equally against Senator DANFORTH and myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

(Mr. SPECTER addressed the Chair.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, are we in a quorum call?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio had suggested the absence of a quorum and the Chair presumes that he has withdrawn that suggestion.

Who yields time?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, how much time does the Senator from Pennsylvania seek?

Mr. SPECTER. Not more than 10 minutes.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I yield the Senator from Pennsylvania as much time as he needs but not in excess of 10 minutes at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I support the position advanced by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, and I oppose the motion to waive the Budget Act as proposed by the distinguished floor manager because the substance of the matter before this body is that the Norfolk Southern offer will produce less revenue than is called for in the budget resolution. In the opinion of this Senator, that is not a technical matter, that is a substantial and substantive matter.

The budget resolution provides that the purchase price shall be $1.2 billion, that that much revenue should be produced from the sale of Conrail. The Congressional Budget Office has reported that there will be a tax loss of $400 million if Norfolk Southern acquires Conrail because of a variety of tax considerations. Therefore, by simple arithmetic there is a loss of $400 million below the $1.2 billion which Conrail is supposed to produce for the budget.

For those reasons, it seems to this Senator that the position asserted by the Senator from Ohio is correct, and that as the U.S. Senate begins its deliberations on many complex issues in 1986, where we will be called upon to reduce the deficit in a variety of ways, it is unwise and inappropriate to accept the offer of Norfolk Southern for Conrail when it means less than the budget resolution provides.

There is, of course, an alternative, and should the distinguished floor manager be successful in his motion to waive the Budget Act, this Senator intends to propose an alternative of the Morgan Stanley proposal to purchase Conrail at a figure significantly in excess of that offered by Norfolk Southern, a figure worth $1.4 billion on the surface and $400 million more to the taxpayers without a deduction for tax loss carryovers, and so forth. So that there is an alternative. But when we talk about $400 million, that is not a technical consideration, and this body ought not to start off 1986 in the context of our efforts to reduce the deficit by approving a sale to Norfolk Southern which brings in $400 million less than called for by the budget resolution.

It is for those reasons that this Senator believes that the point of order raised by the Senator from Ohio is correct, that the Chair was correct in sustaining the point of order, and that the Budget Act ought not be waived.

Mr. President, I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time during the quorum call be allocated equally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

I should like to respond to the point made by the Senator from Ohio, which at least went to the merits, which is really what we are debating now.

This is not procedural. This is on the merits, on whether the Government is going to keep it or sell it. He says a lot of jobs are going to be lost. Here are the facts as to whether Conrail itself is a great job producer.

Conrail has reduced its size. Between 1976 and 1984, its work force has been reduced from 99,000 to 39,000. In 1985 alone, 3,200 Conrail people were laid off. Conrail has announced that it is going to get rid of an additional 4,500 employees by 1989. Conrail has reduced its trackage between 1977 and 1984 by 5,000 miles. It announced last year another 570-mile contraction.

Mr. President, Conrail has been keeping itself afloat by shrinking, by kicking people out of their jobs and reducing its trackage. I do not think it is any great bargain for its employees, and it certainly is not a great bargain for Uncle Sam.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise today to oppose the motion to waive the provisions of Gramm-Rudman-

Hollings and the Budget Act to consider the sale of Conrail to the Norfolk Southern Corp.

Congress has considered the proposed sale of Conrail for nearly 1 year. There is no need for further delay. My vote is not to stall, but to comply with the law, Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, which we enacted just 3 months ago.

Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is absolutely clear. It prohibits the Senate from considering legislation which causes a loss in tax revenue to the Treasury without accompanying cuts in spending or new taxes.

The sale of Conrail will result in a loss of $175 million in revenues, according to the Treasury and a loss of $400 million, according to the Congressional Budget Office.

I voted for Gramm-Rudman-Hollings and I endorse the concept that, in these times of fiscal austerity, we must not permit revenue losses without offsetting them on a pay-as-you-go basis.

All of the Federal income taxes paid by Vermonters pay only two days interest on the Federal debt. I cannot support this measure which causes such a substantial loss of revenues to the Treasury in fiscal year 1987, before Congress has had an opportunity to even consider the appropriate levels of spending for next year.

The Senate need not delay and we must not reverse this important protection established under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I would like to inform the Senate that Senator BAUCUS is returning to Montana today for a critical meeting.

This evening, the Bonneville Power Administration is holding a rate hearing in Columbia Falls, MT.

The hearing is critical to the future of the aluminum industry in the Northwest and the survival of the only aluminum processing plant in Montana.

As other Senators in the Northwest know, the aluminum industry—which has been a major part of this region's economy for decades—is facing very hard times.

To survive, the industry must get reasonable power rates from BPA. That's what tonight's hearing is all about and Senator BAUCUS felt compelled to be there to emphasize the emergency nature of the situation.

Senator BAUCUS plans to return tonight so that he can be here for tomorrow's session.

THE HISTORY OF THE NORFOLK SOUTHERN

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I have had the opportunity to listen to every aspect of the Conrail debate, from the original hearings on the bill in the Commerce Committee to the most recent floor debate. As my colleagues know, I have raised numerous questions and concerns over the proposal to sell Conrail to Norfolk Southern.

Both Secretary Dole and the Justice Department's Antitrust Division have acknowledged potential problems, ranging from diversions to monopoly control. However, they steadfastly adhere to their basic argument that regardless of the potential problems, Conrail's ultimate survival depends on Norfolk Southern's "deep pockets."

I know many of my colleagues are sympathetic to this argument. Yet before making a decision based on that argument, I think it would be useful for my colleagues to review, as I have done, the history of Norfolk's "deep pockets."

Norfolk has been called upon in the recent past to provide "deep pockets" for ailing Northeast railroads.

Norfolk Southern results from the merger of the Southern Railway and Norfolk Western [N&W], the latter with substantial operations in the Northeast. N&W, was itself the product of a series of mergers and consolidations effected in the early 1960's. Most notably, the N&W was a combination of the Norfolk and Western, the Nickel Plate, the Wabash, and the Sandusky line of the Pennsylvania.

In considering the combination, the Interstate Commerce Commission found that the Erie-Lackawanna, Delaware & Hudson and the Boston & Maine could not survive as independent carriers in the face of the new N&W system. The Commission required N&W, if requested to do so by the three roads, to acquire them. As ordered by the ICC, consummation of the merger constituted "acquiescence in and irrevocable assent to" absorption of the three roads. (N&W merger decision, 324 ICC 148 (1964)).

This ICC requirement was a kind of public interest covenant agreed to by Norfolk as a condition for purchasing desired rail properties.

The Erie-Lackawanna and D&H requested inclusion, and early expectations were high. The Commission noted:

As a result of inclusion of the petitioners in the N&W system, petitioners will become stronger carriers and their ability to render adequate transportation service to the public will be strengthened. The advantages flowing from the unification will enable them to render more efficient and economic service to the public. "(N&W merger decision, 330 ICC 780, 826 (1067)).

The rest is, as they say, history. The Erie-Lackawanna underwent a long period of benign neglect, declared bankruptcy and its principal assets were nationalized as part of the formation of Conrail. D&H's financial position declined steadily, avoiding the formality of bankruptcy by becoming a ward of the Federal and State governments. It remained that way until Norfolk Southern sold its ailing child to Guilford Transportation Industries in 1984 for $500,000.

Contrary to the purpose behind the ICC's inclusion order, N&W was able to walk away from the Erie-Lackawanna and D&H through a legal technicality. While agreeing to accept the roads, it always resisted a direct merger. Rather, it offered a parent/subsidiary relationship. A subsidiary company, Dereco, was created, and it owned the Erie-Lackawanna and the D&H. Both railroads were kept separate from the N&W.

N&W went further than simply insulating itself from its subsidiaries. In a number of important ways they materially weakened their finances. In the late 1960's, for example, Dereco funneled $2.3 million in D&H dividends to the failing Erie-Lackawanna. D&H was hardly in a position to give up that kind of cash. N&W also continued to realize tax benefits from the companies it refused to support. As noted by the former Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission:

The tax benefits to the N&W resulting from the D&H's operating losses and investment tax credits have been substantial. Under existing tax law, this is one purpose of establishing a holding company. In addition to providing a vehicle for realizing tax benefits, the N&W created Dereco to shield the profitable N&W from the assumption of debt liability of the Dereco components. (Letter of ICC Chairman A. Daniel O'Neal to U.S. Representative James Hanley, Jan. 6, 1978.)

Although "required" to take the tax benefits from Erie-Lackawanna and D&H, N&W refused to enter into a tax allocation agreement, frequently done in such cases, by which its distressed subsidiaries would have received a portion of the taxes it saved by using the shelter.

Robert Claytor, current chairman of the board of Norfolk Southern and leading proponent of the "deep pockets" theory, was the executive vice president of N&W. Testifying before a 1978 congressional committee on the decline of the D&H, he stated his company's attitude toward its subsidiary very clearly:

N&W's stockholders have been assured that N&W has not assumed or guaranteed any liabilities of D&H and has no financial commitments toward its operation. . . . The future of the D&H rests with Government policy. (Testimony of Robert B. Claytor, executive vice president of N&W, House Subcommittee on Transportation and Commerce, August 15, 1978.)

N&W may have had very deep pockets, but it had very short arms.

Today Norfolk Southern has been presented to those of us in Congress as a kind of White Knight, riding to the rescue of a financially shakey Conrail. Before we let the damsel be rescued, it might be well to consider the remarks of one of our own former Members, Congressman James Hanley, who was deeply involved in the issues surrounding rail service in the Northeast. Testifying before the same committee that Mr. Claytor did in 1978, he said:

Quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, the N&W has exemplified the worst aspects of railroading and corporate tactics and deserves to be roundly condemned for its actions. . . . Obviously, we should not allow the N&W to reap the tax benefits for forcing the railroad (D&H) into bankruptcy nor should it reap the profits from a railroad revitalized with taxpayer's money." (Congressman James Hanley before the House Subcommittee on Transportation and Commerce, August 15, 1978.)

Mr. President, I recite this brief history to my colleagues because I am troubled over the kind of "trust us" advocacy that is being used by the supporters of this sale. The Department of Transportation asks us to accept their conclusion that the merger is what is best for Conrail viability. The Department of Justice asks us to take on faith a divestiture scheme that they will analyze after we vote. Norfolk Southern asks us to trust them to keep Conrail viable even in the event of another recession.

Given the history I have just recited, I cannot find any reasonable basis to trust Norfolk Southern to open its deep pockets to a failing Conrail. Indeed, if their motives were pure as the driven snow, prudent business practice would require that they cut their losses on the failing Conrail that their doom and darkness studies project. There is absolutely no assurance that the Norfolk Southern Corp. is fully committed to the preservation of rail service over Conrail lines, and that Norfolk Southern cannot insulate its other rail operations from those in the Northeast and Midwest, as it did in the case of the Erie-Lackawanna and the Delaware and Hudson.

Mr. President, if Secretary Dole's most compelling argument for selling Conrail to Norfolk Southern is the "deep pockets" argument, then I would submit that we would do well to start looking at the Morgan Stanley alternative.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask that it be charged equally to both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, how much time does the Senator from Missouri have remaining and how much time does the Senator from Ohio have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri has 3 minutes and 22 seconds remaining and the Senator from Ohio has 6 minutes and 38 seconds remaining.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum for 3 minutes on the time of the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that time be equally divided between the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. President, there is only one issue that we are going to vote on in about 5 minutes, and that is: Should the Budget Act be waived? We are not going to vote on whether we believe Conrail should be retained by the Government. We are not going to vote on whether it should be sold to Morgan Stanley. We are not going to vote on whether it should be sold to Norfolk Southern. There is one issue—should the Budget Act, section 303 of that act, be waived? And every Member of this Senate who had spoken so loudly and so effectively about balancing the budget has to recognize that when they cast their vote what they are voting on is not Conrail. They are voting on whether or not the U.S. Senate's first official act will be to waive the Budget Act.

Mr. President, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. President, the issue before the Senate is whether or not we are going to sell the railroad to anybody. If we do not waive the Budget Act, the result of that is that this bill goes right off the floor. The leader said that we will not be considering it again.

The sale of Conrail was built into the budget. We agreed last year that we would make $1.2 billion selling Conrail. The budgetary arguments are all in favor of proceeding with the sale.

The question before us is whether this is going to remain on the floor of the Senate or be pulled off. That is what we are about to vote on.

I urge Members of the Senate to vote to waive the Budget Act. Senator DOMENICI agrees with this position and strongly supports a waiver under the circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, just in 10 seconds I would say not just to waive the Budget Act, but rather to comply with section 303, which provides for a waiver of that particular section. You are not waiving the act; you are complying with the provisions of the act which asks that any kind of revenue impact be discussed and ruled on by the Congress in its budget resolution.

This has been discussed, included in the resolution, and been ruled on. That is why we asked for the waiver, in accordance, really, with the act.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I yield myself 10 seconds. I want to point out to my distinguished colleague from South Carolina that the motion that is before us is to move to waive section 303 of the Budget Act, period. So that when you say we are moving to comply with it, there is no compliance at all. It is moving to waive it, and that is the simple English language.

Mr. HOLLINGS. But the waiver, I say to my distinguished friend, is provided. That motion that has been made has been provided in the act itself.

Mr. METZENBAUM. On the Senator's time, I would be glad to respond.

Mr. HOLLINGS. All right.

Mr. METZENBAUM. The response is, sure, it is provided it can be done, but I think everybody who wants to abide by the budget and thinks the budget is important should not vote to waive it.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I believe the budget is important and that we have complied with it. That is why I would vote to waive, in accordance with the provisions to waive.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To be divided evenly?

Mr. METZENBAUM. To be divided evenly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

VOTE ON MOTION TO WAIVE SECTION 303 OF THE BUDGET ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2:45 having arrived, the question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri to waive section 303 of the Budget Act. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON announced that the Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. QUAYLE). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

AMENDMENT NO. 1440

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Public Sale Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101, et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be profitable corporation under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763);

(4) Morgan Stanley and Company, Incorporated developed a firm proposal on behalf of a diverse group of private investors to purchase the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and to return Conrail to broad private ownership through one or more public stock offerings;

(5) the sale proposal of the investor group organized by Morgan Stanley and Company, Incorporated best meets the objectives of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region that Conrail now serves by continuing Conrail as an independent railroad, and (C) maximizing the return of the United States on its investment consistent with the objectives set forth in subparagraphs (A) and (B);

(6) the sale proposal of the investor group organized by Morgan Stanley and Company, Incorporated satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)); and

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to the investor group organized by Morgan Stanley and Company, Incorporated and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock.

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to private sector by directing and facilitating the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to the investor group organized by Morgan Stanley and Company, Incorporated.

(b) Sections 108, 201, and 202 of this Act shall take effect on the closing date, except that subsection (a) of each of sections 201 and 202 shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) Any provision of this Act which, pursuant to Article I, Section 7 of the Constitution, provides for raising revenue shall only be effective upon the enactment into law of a bill which has originated in the House of Representatives enacting such provision.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, this amendment numbered 1440 is the so-called Morgan Stanley proposal which had been filed as an independent bill and which has been filed as an amendment to the pending bill, which puts into comparison the two serious competing offers for the sale of Conrail.

Mr. President, the budget resolution provides for the sale of Conrail and provides for a return of $1.2 million for the interest of the U.S. Government. There is widespread recognition, both within this body and elsewhere, that it is desirable to sell Conrail to the private sector.

I submit that the real issue which this body must decide is whether Conrail should be sold to Norfolk Southern or whether Conrail should be sold to Morgan Stanley.

Mr. President, I submit that the Morgan Stanley offer is clearly superior to the Norfolk Southern offer because it will bring to the Federal Treasury approximately $600 million more than will be realized by the sale to Norfolk Southern.

The second reason is that the Morgan Stanley offer avoids the very serious antitrust problems posed by Norfolk Southern, which realistically viewed, are a violation of the antitrust law.

Third, Conrail is a viable, stand alone railroad which really meets the objection raised by the Secretary of Transportation in her effort to seek the so-called deep pockets of Norfolk Southern.

An analysis of Conrail's earnings and an analysis of the findings of the National Railway Administration, the congressional overseer in this area, shows conclusively that Conrail has the potential to operate in the future. When concerns are expressed about potential mistreatment of Conrail by Morgan Stanley, the best answer is that Conrail has demonstrated, through a 5-year earning period, its ability to make money and to be a profitable railroad. That, after all, is the best assurance that Conrail will continue to exist

When you take a look at the earnings of Conrail of $39 million in 1981, $174 million in 1982, $313 million in 1983, $500 million in 1984, and $442 million in 1985, it is obvious that Conrail has made a recovery which its history shows makes it a viable railroad for the future.

That, Mr. President, is a brief summary of the arguments which I shall now elaborate upon. These are the essential terms of the Morgan Stanley proposal.

The Morgan Stanley investor group proposes to purchase for cash the 25 million shares of Conrail which constitutes 85 percent of the stock, being all of the stock owned by the U.S. Government, for $56 per share, or a total of $1.4 billion. The critical fact emerges at the outset that that is $200 million more than offered by Norfolk Southern.

In addition, the Morgan Stanley group will cause Conrail to issue to the Government 10-year warrants to purchase 1 million shares of Conrail common stock at a price of $56 per share, which is the same price at which the investor is buying Conrail. Those warrants will be exercisable at any time starting 90 days after the first public offering, up to 10 years after the closing.

The warrants represent approximately 3.5 percent of the amount of Conrail's currently outstanding stock and permit the Government, at no risk, to share appreciation of the Conrail stock.

The group will also commit to return to the Government any Conrail excess cash, defined in the same manner as the Norfolk Southern proposal. It will agree to surrender cumulative net operating loss and investment tax credit carry-forwards, also consistent with the Norfolk Southern offer. Unlike Norfolk Southern, however, the investor group will not use Conrail tax deductions to shelter non-Conrail income.

That is a very important factor, Mr. President, because Norfolk Southern's use of the tax losses will amount to something in the range of $400 million, as I shall establish in a few moments.

Over a period not to exceed 5 years, the investor group will resell its shares to the public. The Government will not bear any market risk associated with the public offering.

Mr. President, those who have been assembled by Morgan Stanley constitute blue-chip investors who have impeccable reputations in the financial world. Their participation is further evidence of the solidity of Conrail, without which Morgan Stanley would not be in this picture, nor would its blue-chip investors.

Through such sales, the group will reduce its aggregate ownership to no more than 40 percent of Conrail's outstanding shares and no single investor will hold more than 10 percent. For a 5-year period from the closing date, no person will be permitted to acquire or increase its ownership to more than 10 percent of the Conrail common stock. No member of the initial investor group will be able to sell shares outside the group without the consent of the group.

Mr. President, for purposes of graphic illustration, a chart has been prepared which is at the rear of the Chamber, denominated "The Morgan Stanley Investor Group Agrees." Then the terms are set forth. At the top of the poster is a statement by President Reagan on January 21, 1986, a week ago yesterday, which sets the administration standard which, we submit, Mr. President, is met by the Morgan Stanley offer much better than by the Norfolk Southern offer. President Reagan made this statement on January 21:

> Now is the time to sell Conrail to the bidder that has offered the best deal for shippers, consumers, rail labor, and all those who depend upon continued service from a financially strong Conrail.

Mr. President, given the strength of Conrail and its ability to continue in existence, I add to the President's statement one other group to be considered and to be satisfied. That is the taxpayers of the United States, who will realize substantially more money from the Morgan Stanley offer than from the Norfolk Southern.

As the chart shows, Mr. President, Morgan Stanley will pay $1.4 billion in cash, which is $200 million more in cash than Norfolk Southern, for the Government's 85-percent interest in Conrail. This, Mr. President, is an important line, where Morgan Stanley asserts "We stand ready to pay now."

As one of my colleagues said yesterday, "I will sell to the first person who brings the check." Well, Morgan Stanley's commitment in a legally binding context is on the table and the check will be produced as soon as the offer is accepted. That is what I propose we initiate by the vote of this body today.

The second aspect of the Morgan Stanley offer is a commitment of 1 million warrants to the Government which will bring another $30 million or $35 million more than Norfolk Southern. That will be calculated at $.035 billion.

The third aspect is, plus another $400 million in taxes in 1986-90, as documented by the Congressional Budget Office estimate, which is the controlling document for our purposes.

The fourth item is a $245 million amount which would be lost to the Federal railroad retirement fund because of merger-related job losses.

The bottom line, Mr. President, is $2 billion; $2 billion as projected by this offer.

Mr. President, the chart continues: "Well over $2 billion to reduce the Federal deficit"—at least $800 million more than under the Morgan Stanley offer.

Question: Under Gramm-Rudman, what programs will be cut or whose taxes will be increased to make up the $800 million lost if Norfolk Southern takes over Conrail?

Mr. President, as we all know, that is on the mind of every U.S. Senator today: What are we going to do to comply with the mandate of Gramm-Rudman? How are we going to deal substantively with the huge deficit which we confront? Eight hundred million dollars is a very substantial sum of money on that critical question.

The chart continues:

Support the Morgan Stanley public offering proposal; oppose the sale to Norfolk Southern. Avoid the permanent damage from a Norfolk Southern takeover of Conrail. No anticompetitive rail monopoly. No job losses. No injury to regional railroads, ports and gateway cities. Get the best deal for the taxpayer. Let Conrail be Conrail.

Mr. President, in assessing the value of Conrail, a number of factors have to be considered. One factor is that the taxpayers of the United States have put some $7 billion in Conrail over many years. Another factor is the book value of Conrail, an item very difficult to document. But reliable estimates place that somewhere between $3 and $4 billion.

Well over a year ago this Senator wrote to the Secretary of Transportation and asked for that figure, and it has not been forthcoming, doubtless because of the difficulty of compiling such a figure. But if Conrail were to be salvaged, if its rails were to be raised and junked, if its cars were to be sold, if its locomotives were to be salvaged or resold, if its real estate were appraised, it might come to a figure in the range of some $3 to $4 billion. Conrail has cash in the range of $850 million, plus $200 million in excess pension and retirement benefits, so that whoever acquires Conrail receives an asset of really great value.

When the Morgan Stanley offer is evaluated in that context, it is an offer which is realistically calculated to take over a railroad, to be able to run the railroad at a reasonable profit and to succeed.

Mr. President, I will now retire to the rear of the Chamber for a moment to refer to another chart which shows the net effect of the steal that would result were Norfolk Southern to acquire Conrail, if the chairman will indulge me for 1 moment.

Mr. President, a part of the issue involved in an evaluation of the sale of Conrail today turns on the substantial period of time which passed since Conrail was initially offered for sale. It was approximately 2 years ago that the Department of Transportation put out the initial bids. I would suggest, Mr. President, that Conrail is demonstrably worth substantially more money today than Conrail was worth at the time the bids were first put out.

This chart, entitled "Who's the Fast Buck Artist in the Conrail Game?" shows the steal which would be present with the sale to Norfolk Southern. On the top of the chart there is the denomination, "Norfolk Southern Cash Needs" totaling $1.875 billion, constituting $1.2 billion in purchase price, $375 million to labor, $300 million to working capital, which totals $1.875 billion.

On the bottom side of the line is Norfolk Southern's cash receipts, overall $2.302 billion; $1.122 billion in overall tax savings projected over the life of the depreciation and other tax considerations, $900 million in Conrail cash, $250 million from overfunded Conrail pension fund, $30 million from divestitures, so that in this acquisition Norfolk Southern gets $427 million plus the railroad—$427 million plus the railroad.

That is the arrangement which this body is being asked to approve today. This is a rail entity of very substantial value which can succeed as a stand alone railroad and which will be successful if purchased by the Morgan Stanley group.

Mr. President, the Secretary of Transportation has objected to the sale to Morgan Stanley and has sought the sale to Norfolk Southern on the ground that the Secretary of Transportation seeks a very deep pocket which will assure that Conrail will operate in the future without ever again being a problem for the U.S. Government.

Mr. President, if we were to combine all the railroads in the United States, we would have the deepest pocket, we would have the most competitive assurance that the railroads would succeed because of their monopoly position. But that kind of assurance is inappropriate. That kind of assurance costs taxpayers, costs consumers, costs shippers, costs labor, and costs business much more than it brings in, in terms of the elimination of any conceivable risk for the future. We simply cannot have the kind of monopolization where so much competition would be destroyed in order to achieve the sort of assurance looked for by the Secretary of Transportation.

The future of Conrail was the subject of an elaborate study, to which I alluded earlier, by the United States Railway Association, which was completed on July 29, 1985, and looked into the Secretary's concern about what would happen to Conrail in the future. These are the summary of findings, Mr. President, at page 1-5, "Compared to Conrail's May 1984 outlook"—which was the basis of the United States Railway Association's April 1, 1985 report "the revised Conrail traffic outlook is stronger as a result of more current estimates of the macroeconomic environment, specifically reduced inflation rates and elimination of a recessionary cycle during the forecast priod. While a nonrecession period of such duration could be regarded as unusual, it is typical of other current macroeconomic contrasts. Moreover, Conrail has been conservative in the industrial production index growth . . . assumed during the forecast period. Conrail reasonably estimated traffic flows within the assumed economic environment. Conrail's operating income was reasonably forecasted for the assumed traffic levels and was based on rates of accomplishment. Conrail's maintenance and capital program estimates are appropriate to the current condition of the plant and the wear on plant implicit in projected traffic levels."

Moving over to page 1-6,

The United States Railway Association found no reason to alter the Conrail viability conclusion reported in April. No one can guarantee the effects of tomorrow but all available evidence supports a finding that Conrail can generate positive cash flow for the foreseeable future.

Mr. President, that is the crux of the issue before this body today, on whether Conrail can function as a stand-alone railroad.

The United States Railway Association, backed by its expertise, experience, knowledge, and authoritative position, says that all available evidence supports a finding that Conrail can generate positive cash flow for the foreseeable future. That is why the sophisticated investors of Morgan Stanley have made the offer which they have. That is why the blue chip investors stand behind Morgan Stanley on its offer, and that is the best assurance as to what will happen in the future.

Mr. President, I submit that the alternative of selling to Morgan Stanley instead of Norfolk Southern is established by the facts already presented, but it is a conclusive judgment when the issue of antitrust and anticompetitive matters are taken into account.

Mr. President, the large chart positioned in the rear of the Chamber shows the overlap of Conrail and the Norfolk Southern systems and the factor of production of competition which would occur if these two rail lines were to merge.

It is apparent, in viewing the blue and red lines on this chart, constituting a significant portion of the Northeast and Midwestern sections of the United States, what the impact would be. The blue lines are the Conrail lines extending from St. Louis through to Boston, north of Baltimore, into Montreal. The red lines are the tracks of Norfolk Southern, extending to the west of St. Louis and Kansas City, running through to Baltimore, on practically parallel lines with the Conrail system, and the Norfolk line extending to the south into Louisiana and Florida, through Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, and Virginia, constituting an enormous rail line.

On its face, it is apparent that if you take the 18,000-mile line of Norfolk Southern, which has been put together by acquisition and merger, and combine that with the 15,000-mile Conrail line, you have a giant rail system which affects, realistically, not only the eastern section of the United States but also the entire Nation. It would have a very profound impact upon the railway system and the transportation system of the Nation as a whole.

Mr. President, this matter was reviewed primarily by the Department of Justice on the antitrust issue, and the Department of Justice wrote, in a letter to the Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth Dole, exactly 1 year ago today, January 29, 1985, referring to the combination of Norfolk Southern and Conrail:

* * * The merger would have a significant adverse effect on competition for the transport of commodities to and from a number of locations in several states, with the greatest adverse effect occurring at locations along an east-west rail corridor * * *

Mr. President, those statements form the overlay of the conclusions of the Department of Justice, and as of this moment, those conclusions stand fast.

Norfolk Southern has attempted, through a series of proposed divestitures to two small railroads—Guilford and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie—to solve this antitrust problem. The first two efforts were conclusive failures, recognized by all involved. The third submission is equally doomed to failure for the same reasons that the first two submissions were failures.

The specifics on failure as to the first and second divestiture proposals were outlined in a report by R.L. Banks & Associates, Inc., which I have placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in a statement made on January 21, 1986, the first day we considered this issue. Suffice it to say, for current purposes, that the Banks study finds—and this is a quotation from page 13 of the report:

* * * that Guilford's viability would be dependent heavily upon the realization of several optimistic assumptions, and that even under the most favorable circumstances, Guilford's continued existence would be parlous.

On page 14:

Coupled with poor projected liquidity, Guilford would be hard pressed to maintain the quality of service and competitive thrust projected by its marketing and operating plans.

A final statement on Guilford:

Doubts about the realism and the marketing plans apply equally to the financial statements; the very real possibility that Guilford would fail to realize projected gains in revenues and efficiency leads to the conclusion that the survival of an expanded Guilford system is yet to be proven.

The Banks study came to essentially the same conclusions about Pittsburgh & Lake Erie. Page 19 of the Banks report says:

There is adequate evidence to support the view that seriously unrealistic assumptions are a factor in P&LE's plan. In addition, it is questionable whether there is a reasonable expectation that P&LE is likely to be financially capable of providing long-term, viable rail service over the divestitured properties given the fact that a third party would acquire the lines and lease them back to Pittsburgh & Lake Erie.

Mr. President, the staff of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the ICC, made a study of the reasonable likelihood of success of the proposed divestiture to Guilford and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie and came to the same conclusion the Banks study did.

Again, Mr. President, these documents are placed in full in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on January 21 and suffice it for present purposes, simply for summary, to refer to the conclusions which appear at page 7 of the study by the staff of the Interstate Commerce Commission prepared for the Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation and Tourism.

These are the conclusions:

Because these assumptions, referring to what Guilford has proposed, generally are without merit, Guilford's proposal will not result in a viable post-divestiture operation. Guilford has underestimated its rehabilitation by only about 10 percent; however, even with the necessary rehabilitation the carrier's operating facilities will be inferior to its chief competitor, Norfolk Southern-Conrail in terms of both structure and circuitry. Its operating plan does not take into account the numerous operating difficulties such as the lack of double-track line, poorly-spaced sidings and inefficient connections. Guilford also fails to consider how the movement of spurs to and from Norfolk Southern-Conrail lines will be affected by the large volume of Norfolk Southern-Conrail traffic on those lines.

And continuing on page 8:

Without the full amount of revenues many project, Guilford will be perilously unable to meet all of its annual fixed charges.

The ICC study came to essentially the same conclusion as to Pittsburgh & Lake Erie, with the summary appearing on page 9 as follows—and again all this is in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in detail on January 21. The summary sufficient for present purposes says:

However, Pittsburgh & Lake Erie's financial forecasts are foremost open to question. It must be noted that even if all of P&LE projections are accepted, P&LE admits that it cannot service all of its substantial debt using revenues from rail operation and substantial income from the sale of and use of Conrail assets is needed to cover the debt payments.

For those reasons, the ICC rejected the proposal to have divestiture for those two small lines to be sufficient.

Mr. President, we have prepared two additional charts which show the relative strength of Pittsburgh & Lake Erie and Guilford contrasted with combined Norfolk Southern-Conrail. The first chart now positioned at the rear of the Chamber designates 1984 net income in millions, with Conrail being $500 million and Norfolk Southern at $482 million for a total income of $982 million. Guilford has $5 million and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie is $12 million under the line. It should have been in red even though it appears in black.

Yet, we are being asked to take this giant, this colossus, and have these two small ineffective railroads combine to compete with them.

The second chart, Mr. President, shows 1984 revenues that again, a comparison shows the impossibility of these two small lines to compete. Conrail is shown here with 1984 revenue of $3,379 million; Norfolk Southern, $3,525 million; for a total of $6,904 million; contrasted with Guilford's $307 million and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie $50 million, again showing the impossibility of any realistic competition.

It was for those reasons, Mr. President, that the newly sworn-in Assistant Attorney General Douglas Ginsburg, for the Department of Justice, wrote to Secretary of Transportation Dole on September 25, 1985 in ruling out the proposed divestiture to Guilford and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie in a very strongly worded letter which again has been made a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD back on January 21. These are some of the essential conclusions by the Department of Justice.

Based on the information we have obtained to date, including but not limited to recent preliminary report of the Department's independent counsel, R.L. Banks and Associates, it does not appear that the proposed divestiture will establish a rail carrier in the designated corridor capable of providing long-term viable competitive service.

Also a great concern is the fact that Guilford's operating plan provides no assurance that Guilford will provide the sort of competition with the merged Norfolk Southern-Conrail that would be necessary in order to eliminate the problems created by the sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern.

Skipping again for purposes of brevity:

While Guilford's participation in the traffic might allow Guilford to remain financially viable and even to earn a profit, it would not address the competitive problems created by the sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern.

From our standpoint, we must be satisfied that the divestiture will create not just a railroad that will be viable in the long term but one which will be an effective competitor in the problem markets.

Mr. President, it is in this context that a rather strange thing occurred in November 1985. That is that Norfolk Southern came forward with a third divestiture proposal, a skeleton plan which offered no details, which offered no substance to what would be accomplished, and that plan surprisingly enough was preliminarily approved by the Department of Justice.

Mr. President, that preliminary approval was granted on November 19 in what is realistically viewed a very, very surprising contest. There has since been an effort to determine what really is going to happen with these two tiny railroads which would enable the Department of Justice to move from the strong opinion rendered in its September 25, 1985, letter to Secretary of Transportation Dole, less than 2 months before it gave preliminary approval and this Senator sought to find what changes there were which could conceivably justify such preliminary approval.

Mr. President, it is appropriate to know that a session of the Judiciary Committee was called for December 21, 1985, 2 days after the preliminary approval, and on this occasion the Judiciary Committee did not have a regular hearing because the notice was not in accordance with the rules of the Senate, but the distinguished chairman, Senator THURMOND, was present and this Senator was present and only the two of us proceeded to question Secretary of Transportation Dole and Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg. The results of that proceeding in the judgment of this Senator shed absolutely no light on why the Department of Justice had made this strange reversal.

I then wrote to the Department of Justice, to Mr. Ginsburg on December 19, and the fastest way to express it is to read the letter which is less than a page and this Senator stated there:

I remain extremely concerned about the unanswered questions surrounding the "preliminary approval" which the Department of Justice's Antitrust Division has given to the latest divestiture plan proposed by Norfolk Southern, Guilford Transportation Industries, and the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad.

I previously expressed this concern to you when you appeared before an "informal gathering" of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary regarding the sale of Conrail last month. At that time, you stated that the latest divestiture plan "appeared" to resolve Justice's concerns of anticompetitive effects resulting from the proposed merger of the Conrail and Norfolk Southern systems. You admitted during that meeting, however, that extensive documentation, including financial plans, revenue estimates, balance sheets and operating schedules, would have to be submitted by the parties, and evaluated and verified by the Antitrust Division, as well as by an outside consultant, before any final approval be given.

I would like to know whether the outside consultant has been chosen and whether any of the necessary documentation has been provided to you or your staff. Specifically what, if any, further action has been taken thus far by Justice with regard to analysis of this divestiture proposal? I would also appreciate it if you would provide me with a list of any remaining documents which must be supplied to you, when such documents are expected, and when you would reasonably expect review of the documents to be completed by both Justice and its outside consultant.

When no response was received to this letter, this Senator then wrote to the Attorney General on January 9, 1986, requesting a prompt response to the letter of December 19, 1985, and noting that the majority leader had placed the Conrail issue on the Senate agenda for January 21, 1986, our first day back.

While sitting on the floor of the Senate preparing to make a statement on Conrail on January 21, 1986, this Senator received a reply, finally, from Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg, which is most easily summarized by again reading it. It is a relatively short letter.

Starting at paragraph 2, after some reference matters, it reads:

The Department has made significant progress in our preparations to review the divestiture proposal. First, we have given copies of the new divestiture proposal to transportation officials from all the States in the divestiture corridor, including Pennsylvania, and to several railroads and other interested parties, in order that we might obtain their views on the proposal at an early date. Second, the Department has nearly completed the process of selecting an outside consultant; we expect that the consultant will be selected, retained, and ready to begin work by January 31.

This is a surprising feature that Banks, which had submitted a voluminous report rejecting Guilford and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie, no longer was satisfactory to the Department of Justice as its consultant. Doubtless Banks was not satisfactory to the Department of Justice because Banks had come to the wrong conclusion. As of this moment, January 29, we still do not have a consultant selected by the Department of Justice.

The letter from Mr. Ginsburg to me—and I believe it is of sufficient importance that I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
ANTITRUST DIVISION,
Washington, DC, January 21, 1986.

Hon. ARLEN SPECTER,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SPECTER: This letter responds to your letters of December 19, 1985 and January 9, 1986, concerning the proposed sale of Consolidated Rail Corporation ("Conrail") to Norfolk Southern Corporation ("NS"). You have asked what further action the Department of Justice has taken, since the informal meeting that Secretary Dole and I had with you and several other Senators on November 21, 1985, to analyze the divestiture proposal made in NS. Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc. ("GTI"), and the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad ("P&LE") in mid-November 1985. In particular, you have requested information concerning both the outside consultant that we will retain to assist us in our analysis and the documentation that we will receive from the parties to the proposed divestiture.

The Department has made significant progress in our preparations to review the divestiture proposal. First, we have given copies of the new divestiture proposal to transportation officials from all the States in the divestiture corridor, including Pennsylvania, and to several railroads and other interested parties, in order that we might obtain their views on the proposal at an early date. Second, the Department has nearly completed the process of selecting an outside consultant; we expect that the consultant will be selected, retained, and ready to begin work by January 31.

Third, the Department recently sent detailed information requests to GTI and P&LE; copies of the requests are enclosed. Similar requests will be sent next week to NS and Conrail. As the GTI and P&LE information requests state, we may find it necessary to seek additional information at a later date, as our analysis of the divestiture proposal progresses. In order to facilitate meaningful public comment about the divestiture proposal, we have advised GTI and P&LE that they should "disclose publicly all information that you provide to us about your plans and ability to operate the divested rail properties, except when the information is particularly sensitive. . . ."

If the parties meet the various deadlines contained in our information request letters, we should begin to receive specific information concerning the proposed divestiture from GTI and P&LE within the next two weeks and from NS and Conrail soon thereafter. We and our consultant will review that information and conduct a field investigation as quickly as possible. We hope to complete the process and make a recommendation to the Attorney General by late March or early April about whether the new divestiture proposal will do in fact what it appears to do on its face—provide long-term, viable, and competitive rail service to the areas identified in our January 29 and March 26, 1985, letters to Secretary Dole.

I trust that this letter has been responsive to your concerns about our analysis of the new divestiture proposal. I would be happy to discuss this issue with you in person if you wish.

Sincerely,

DOUGLAS H. GINSBURG,
Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, the letter of January 21, 1986, had enclosed with it two letters which the Department of Justice had written to Guilford and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie, dated January 8, 1986. It is unexplained, Mr. President—I search for a word not to use one too harsh—it is unexplained why, when the proposal was submitted on November 11 and the Department of Justice gave preliminary approval on November 19, that it took until January 8 for the Department to ask questions of Guilford and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie, but that is what happened. And it was only at that time that requests for documents, the divestiture agreement, operating statement, operation plans, and so forth, were requested.

Mr. President, at this point, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the letter from the Department of Justice to Guilford be printed in the RECORD. It is not necessary to encumber the RECORD with the one to Pittsburgh & Lake Erie because it is identical in form.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, DC, January 8, 1986.

JOE SIMS, Esq.,
Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue, Metropolitan Square, Washington, DC.

DEAR JOE: As you know, the Department of Justice has announced that it will proceed with the second phase of its analysis of the divestitures proposed in connection with the planned sale of Conrail to the Norfolk Southern Corporation. In this regard, we have reviewed the November 11 and November 19, 1985 joint documents of Norfolk Southern Corporation, Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc., and the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad Company. Although those documents have provided some information to help us determine whether the new divestiture plan will achieve long-term, viable, competitive rail service that will resolve the competitive problems we have identified, a substantial amount of additional information will be needed before we can make a final determination about the divestiture. Accordingly, I am enclosing an initial list of the types of additional information that we will need to receive from GTI to complete our analysis.

I wish to emphasize strongly that time is of the essence in complying with these information requests. The consulting firm that the Department selects to assist in our analysis must have information on all of the basic details of GTI's proposed post-divestiture plans before it can begin conducting its analysis. If there are delays in receiving that information, there will be delays in completing the analysis and corresponding delays in the final decision of the Attorney General. Accordingly, I have marked with an asterisk those requests for which we need complete responses as soon as possible and no later than January 24 1986. We ask that you supply us with complete responses to those requests not marked by February 10, 1986. In order to facilitate this process, I would like to meet with you or any other GTI representative as soon as possible in order to answer any questions you may have about the scope of the requests.

As you may know, it is possible under the Freedom of Information Act for the Justice Department to refuse to disclose publicly confidential commercial or financial information. Much of the information we are requesting in this letter could therefore be held in confidence by the Department, if you were to request that it be treated confidentially. However, the nature and viability of the rail service your client intends to provide on the divested properties is of major interest to Congress and the public. We believe, therefore, that it is appropriate to disclose publicly all information that you provide to us about your plans and ability to operate the divested rail properties, except when the information is particularly sensitive. Accordingly, we are asking that you designate information as confidential only if its public disclosure would be clearly unwarranted. In particular, we believe that the details of both your final agreement with Norfolk Southern and your operating plan should be available for public analysis, and that at least a general description of your financial structure and market analysis should be disclosed. In addition, you should realize that it will be necessary for us to disclose some or all of the information that you designate as confidential to the outside consultant who will be retained by the Department to assist in our analysis of the divestiture. Please let us know if you would like to have the consultant enter into a confidentiality agreement with GTI. In addition, we plan to request that Donaldson, Lufkin and Jenrette furnish us their firm's internal documents concerning GTI's proposed acquisition of the divestiture properties, and we are asking that you waive any claim of confidentiality that GTI may have concerning such documents.

Finally, I note that the attached request is preliminary and that in the future it will be necessary for us or our consultant to request additional material about the proposed purchase. Please note that whenever the term "GTI" is used in the attached information requests, we intend that the term include GTI's Rail Division and its corporate parent and subsidiaries, unless otherwise specified.

If you have any questions about this matter, please call me at (202) 724-6478.

Sincerely,

PAUL A. MAPES,
Attorney, Antitrust Division.

c. Coordination of train schedules;
d. Run-through trains, and
e. Routing traffic through particular gateways.

5. A study estimating the volume of revenue freight cars that, as a result of NS's acquisition of Conrail, may be diverted to or from railroads currently operated by GTI and to or from any entity that GTI may use to provide rail service over the acquired properties.

1. All information that was requested but not provided to the Department of Justice in response to previous requests for information and that would still be relevant to the new divestiture proposal, including but not limited to Appendix A of Sepember 13, 1985 report of R.L Banks & Associates, which is attached to this letter.

2. All studies, analyses, and reports within the possession of GTI not otherwise requested that relate to the agreement to purchase or lease the acquired properties: development or implementation of an operating plan for the acquired properties; financing the purchase and operation of the acquired properties; estimating current or future revenues and expenses for operating the acquired properties; and estimating the current or future flow and volume of rail traffic on the acquired properties.

3. Traffic tapes showing 100 percent of traffic moved on each GTI railroad for calendar year 1984.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, on page 2 of this letter, there is a very important statement where the Justice Department says to attorneys for Guilford:

However, the nature and viability of the rail service your client intends to provide on the divested properties is of major interest to Congress and the public.

I could not agree more with that statement, that it is of major interest to the Congress, and the Congress, obviously, includes the Senate of the United States. And yet this body, the U.S. Senate, is being asked to approve this sale without having that information.

Mr. President, in a matter of this magnitude, of this importance to the public and this country, it is outrageous and scandalous that this body be asked to or consent to giving approval to this merger on the face of this record with all of these unanswered questions.

Mr. President, there has been an effort made by the U.S. Railway Association to review these matters. In a letter dated December 3, 1985, the U.S. Railway Association, writing to the Honorable JAMES J. FLORIO of the House of Representatives, states on page 1:

Lacking "definitive agreements" which should clarify important terms still under negotiation, the divestiture carriers have not revised their operating plans and financial projections.

In short, the U.S. Railway Association cannot answer the question as to whether divestiture plan 3 has any meaning at all.

Mr. President, the problems identified by the Department of Justice in its September 25, 1985, letter concerning the original divestiture to Guilford and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie remain unsolved, such as, first, there will continue to be little or no service to many of the problem markets.

That is what the Department of Justice said on September 25, and that is still the inevitable result with these two small railroads.

Second, Guilford and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie will not meet the Department of Justice's test for effective competition in 10 of the 16 markets.

Third, the substitution of One Streak of Rust, the name of the line between Toledo and Fort Wayne, but for the Delta, the St. Louis segment contained in the original divestiture plan to be the obvious facility to be acquired, are still inferior.

Fourth, Guilford and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie's service will still be "substantially slower and less frequent than that which is likely to be offered by Norfolk Southern and Conrail"—a finding of the Department of Justice's September 25 letter, which ruled out the divestiture plan.

Fifth, substantial questions concerning the accuracy of Guilford's estimates of its operating costs, as well as Guilford's ability to obtain the revenues projected by its operating plan, as identified in the September 25, 1985 letter, are still present.

Sixth, circuitous routes between major problem markets still exist.

Seventh, reliance upon reciprocal switching will still be present to prevent Guilford and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie from providing competitive service on auto-related movements from Wayne and Washtenaw Counties as identified in the Department of Justice letter.

Eighth, these two railroads will not obtain direct access to shippers and "will have to rely on their competitors for shipping in almost every location."

So that, on this state of the record, Mr. President, there is, simply stated, no way that this divestiture can provide the kind of competition which the Department of Justice said was mandatory when it wrote its letter on January 29, 1985, and which the Department of Justice said was not presented when it wrote to the Secretary of Transportation on September 25, 1985. Yet this body is being asked to buy a pig in a poke and give approval in the context where the divestiture cannot possibly provide the kind of competition which is necessary to avoid a violation of the antitrust laws.

Mr. President, there has been a very able analysis made of the antitrust aspects of this proposed merger by Arnold & Porter. And, although this letter running some 27 pages has been made a part of the RECORD in the past, it is worth inserting at this point because it summarizes the situation in an excellent fashion. So that my colleagues may have an opportunity to read this letter in the RECORD, its availability for House Members, and its relevance on other matters which may come before this body, including the antitrust questions, it is worth inserting in the RECORD.

I ask unanimous consent that the full test appear in the RECORD as if read on the floor.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ARNOLD & PORTER,
Washington, DC, January 8, 1986.

Re Norfolk Southern-Conrail.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
Chairman, Senate Committee on the Judiciary, Dirksen Office Building, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

Hon. JOSEPH R. BIDEN, Jr.,
Senate Committee on the Judiciary, Dirksen Office Building, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATORS: We are writing on behalf of CSX Corporation ("CSX") to set forth our views concerning the inadequacy of the process that has culminated in the Antitrust Division's preliminary approval of the latest divestiture plan put forward by Norfolk Southern Corporation ("Norfolk Southern"). That plan, advanced in aid of Norfolk Southern's proposed acquisition of the government's stock interest in consolidated Rail Corporation ("Conrail"), would involve divestitures of line segments and other rail assets to Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc. ("Guilford" or "GTI") and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad ("P&LE").

SUMMARY OF CSX'S POSITION

The Antitrust Division's preliminary approval of the latest Norfolk Southern divestiture plan is fundamentally flawed for the following reasons, among others:

The Division refused to consider the views of interested and affected parties, and instead permitted Norfolk Southern to withhold from the public any information about its latest divestiture proposal until after the Division gave its preliminary approval;

The Division lacked both the information and the in-house expertise necessary to make an informed, meaningful judgment concerning the latest divestiture proposal;

On its face, the latest divestiture plan is as inadequate as the earlier versions, because of the manifest incapacity of Guilford and P&LE to provide viable, long-term competitive rail transportation in the Conrail service area.

INADEQUATE DISCLOSURE OF MEANINGFUL INFORMATION

From late September 1985, when Norfolk Southern earlier proposed and the Antitrust Division speedily rejected a previous Norfolk Southern divestiture plan, to and including November 19 and 21, 1985, when the Antitrust Division gave its preliminary assent to the latest version, Norfolk Southern and the Division conducted their business behind a veil of secrecy. By the admission of Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg before members of the Senate Judiciary Committee on November 21, 1985, representatives of Norfolk Southern and the Division engaged in nearly continuous negotiations commencing in late September.

On or about November 11, 1985, Norfolk Southern, together with Guilford and P&LE, submitted to the Division a "Joint Memorandum" that recited certain particulars of a further revised divestiture package. The Joint Memorandum was unaccompanied by meaningful evidentiary support, or by evidence of revised or amended contracts between Norfolk Southern on the one hand and Guilford and P&LE on the other. Thereafter, according to Mr. Ginsburg, the Division and Norforlk Southern engaged in further negotiations, again of an unspecified character.

During those negotiations, according to later reports, Mr. Ginsburg wrung additional concessions from Norfolk Southern. The particulars of those concessions have not yet been made public.

On November 19, 1985, the Antitrust Division stated in a press release that it "appeared" Norfolk Southern now had advanced a satisfactory divestiture package. Again, only the sketchiest of information was announced.

Throughout this "process" of developing Norfolk Southern's third divestiture plan, the many interested parties who are vitally concerned about the preservation of competition in rail transportation in the eastern United States vainly sought to be heard before the Division. In conversations with the Staff and in letters to Mr. Ginsburg, they pointed out that past Norfolk Southern divestiture proposals had proved inadequate upon public examination; that the Staff had benefitted from the ventilation of those proposals, and their subjection to public scrutiny as proposals, before the Division gave any indication, however preliminary, of its approval or disapproval. Those arguments were made without avail.

On November 21, 1985, two days after the Division's press release, the proponents of the Norfolk Southern transaction appeared before members of the Senate Judiciary Committee. Secretary Dole and Mr. Ginsburg were heard at length. Again, critics of the transaction sought but were denied an opportunity to be heard before the Committee. The Committee's session was called at such an inappropriate time under the Senate's rules that the Committee Chairman was obliged to declare the session not a hearing, but only a "meeting," of which no official transcript was even maintained.

To this day, the particulars of the latest Norfolk Southern divestiture program are unknown to the public. Perhaps they are unknown to Guilford and P&LE; presumably they are unknown as well to the Antitrust Division. So far as is publicly known, the agreements have yet to be reduced to writing. Nobody has publicly specified what industries will be served by Guilford along substantial segments of the rail lines at issue in the latest plan. The candidates for divestiture have not made public updated financial projections or pro formas. Updated operating plans have not been forthcoming from either Norfolk Southern or from Guilford or P&LE.

THE ANTITRUST DIVISION NECESSARILY LACKS THE DATA NEEDED TO MAKE AN INFORMED FINAL JUDGMENT

The Antitrust Division says it has exacted meaningful concessions from Norfolk Southern and has obtained every element needed to establish viable, long-term, effective competition in rail transportation in the geographic area to be dominated by the combined Norfolk Southern-Conrail. That position is insupportable. Proof of this may be found in a partial listing of the indispensable information that the Antitrust Division admittedly did not have when it signaled its preliminary approval of the Norfolk Southern divestiture plan and that, so far as can be ascertained, the Division still does not have:

The written agreements between Norfolk Southern on the one hand, and Guilford and P&LE on the other, setting forth the terms and conditions of the latest divestiture plan (including such fundamental matters as the total price to be paid by P&LE for the lines to be acquired by it);

Marketing and operating plans for Guilford and P&LE, including projected train schedules and supporting data for revenue and cost projections;

Financial projections for Guilford and P&LE, including sources of funding for the payments to be made to Norfolk Southern in respect of line acquisitions, equipment purchases, leasehold arrangements, and track and yard rehabilitation; pro forma financials showing anticipated revenues and expenditures in the first full year of operations following divestiture; and balance sheets for the pro forma year;

Density projections showing the likely volume of traffic to be handled over the rail lines and trackage rights to be acquired by Guilford and P&LE, together with projections of commodity "mix" sufficient to form a reasonable basis for projections of anticipated revenues.

The Antitrust Division's failure to have even the most rudimentary information available to it before intimating its preliminary acceptance of the latest Norfolk Southern plan demonstrates that the Division cannot have analyzed the Norfolk Southern proposal with the care warranted by a matter of such importance. If this were a proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission (the "ICC"), the materials released to date by the proponents of the Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination and ancillary divestiture would fail to satisfy the basic requirements of the administrative agency for an opening filing. Instead, Norfolk Southern has accomplished a de facto reversal of the burden of coming forward with evidence to support its proposals—it, and its proposed candidates for divestiture, keep their information close to the vest, while commentators and critics are obliged to scramble for relevant data and to speculate concerning the details of the contemplated transaction.

In one sense, the Antitrust Division's latest response to Norfolk Southern comes as no surprise. The Division does not function in this matter as the neutral arbiter of a merger proposed by two private parties. Rather, the Division is acting as legal counsel to the Department of Transportation, which since January 1985 has been pressing for the sale of the government's stock interest in Conrail to Norfolk Southern. Proof of the Division's role as advocate, rather than as disinterested administrator, may be found in the Division's widespread assertion of the "work product" privilege in resisting disclosure of documents in a Freedom of Information Act lawsuit brought by CSX against the Department of Justice and currently pending before Judge Jackson in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia. As advocate for the cause of its client, rather than an impartial administrator passing upon the merger plans of two unaffiliated parties, the Division has put the best face it can on its client's determined course of action—without meaningful review of the facts before the Division undertook to express a preliminary opinion of approval. In effect, the Antitrust Division by its actions of November 19 and 21 has disqualified itself as the watchdog of the public interest so far as the Conrail issue is concerned.

THE PRESENT DIVESTITURE PLAN REMAINS WOEFULLY DEFICIENT

It merits emphasis that this is the latest in a series of occasions on which Norfolk Southern, together with Guilford and P&LE, has announced a "definitive" plan of divestiture, which supposedly provides a complete answer to the Antitrust Division's requirements for approval of the Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination. The first such plan featured as its centerpiece the sale to Guilford of the old Nickel Plate line from Crestline, Ohio to East St. Louis, Illinois—a line of track in such disrepair that it is now generally known as the "Streak of Rust." When the proposal initially advanced by Norfolk Southern was universally condemned, Norfolk, after having previously tacked on some inconsequential trackage-rights arrangements for Guilford in the East (to Croxton Yard, New Jersey, and Lurgan, Pennsylvania), substituted for the Nickel Plate a "trackage rights" arrangement over Conrail's parallel line from Ridgeway, Ohio to East St. Louis. That arrangement may have improved the quality of track involved in the transaction, but it lessened the number and volume of shippers to be served directly by Guilford, because the "trackage rights" arrangement was "overhead" only—it carried no right to serve customers en route.

Now that its second proposal has been rejected, Norfolk Southern has come up with a third plan, and a fourth public declaration that at last it has resolved all outstanding anticompetitive issues. There is no reason to suppose that Norfolk Southern's latest proposal is any more acceptable than the earlier versions. Each of these proposals in turn has been discredited in the public eye after interested (and disinterested) parties have had an opportunity to examine the details and to comment upon them.

On its face, the latest plan fails to accomplish more than marginal adjustments to the earlier variations. P&LE is accorded the right to purchase an additional line of track, from Toledo to Fort Wayne—which is said to be akin to the old Nickel Plate in terms of its parlous condition, and which may well be nicknamed "Son of Streak of Rust." Guilford obtains the nominal opportunity to provide rail transportation service to Detroit (but not to Ann Arbor), but only on an arrangement that, according to Conrail, will enable Guilford to serve fewer than one-quarter of the shippers and receivers in the Detroit metropolitan area. Also, Guilford obtains the theoretical right to provide outbound rail transportation service for some (but not all) of the automotive plants in Wayne County, but only if Guilford can obtain the highly specialized, expensive automotive transportation equipment that the auto manufacturers insist their rail carriers furnish—equipment that currently is in short supply in the marketplace, and that Norfolk Southern has given no indication it will make available to Guilford.

Guilford's own sketchy figures, released as part of the November 11, 1985 Joint Memorandum, disclose that under the now-pending plan of divestiture, Guilford's basic plan of business is essentially unaltered. Guilford will not provide comprehensive rail transportation service in the area deemed by the Antitrust Division to be adversely affected by the Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination. Rather, Guilford stands by its original intention to concentrate on providing TOFC service from Boston and New York in the East to Chicago and St. Louis in the West—through the impacted area as defined by the Division, but not in it. That service will be confined for the most part to one through train in each direction each day. If the congressional testimony of Guilford's principal shareholder is to be believed, GTI's service on this time-sensitive traffic is to be provided on trains that will operate at 40 or 50 miles per hour, in contrast to Norfolk Southern-Conrail's 60 to 70 mile per hour service.

THE NORFOLK SOUTHERN-CONRAIL COMBINATION PORTENDS A MASSIVE VIOLATION OF THE ANTITRUST LAWS

No observer of the situation seriously disputes that a combination of Norfolk Southern and Conrail, standing alone, would violate the federal antitrust laws. The Antitrust Division has said so. In his letter of January 29, 1985 to Secretary Dole, then Assistant Attorney General McGrath wrote: "[W]e have concluded that, without appropriate divestitures, the proposed merger would violate both Clayton Act and Interstate Commerce Act merger review standards. The merger would have a significant adverse effect on competition for the transport of commodities to and from a number of locations in several states, with the greatest adverse effect occurring at locations along an east-west rail corridor running between Buffalo and Pittsburgh in the east and St. Louis and Chicago in the west" (McGrath Jan. 29, 1985 letter, p. 1).

To be sure, many observers, including two former heads of the Antitrust Division, have questioned the thoroughness of the Division's analysis leading even to the foregoing conclusion. First, the Division neglected the "monopoly extension" aspects of the Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination, arising from Conrail's rail transportation monopoly throughout the vital tri-State region encompassed by eastern Pennsylvania, New York, and New Jersey. Second, the Division employed a series of "screens"—many of them unprecedented—to narrow its projection of the adverse effects of the transaction. Third, the Division ignored the issue of "resourcing" basic commodity movements, such as coal and grain, that will arise once a dominant Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination alters transportation patterns throughout the present Conrail service territory and beyond. Finally, the Division departed from methodologies customarily used by it in rail merger cases (including most prominently in the Santa Fe-Southern Pacific proceeding, currently before the ICC).

In effect, the Antitrust Division treated the antitrust issues presented by the proposed Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination as a static picture, taken at the hypothesized instant of combination, while disregarding the dynamic consequences that would flow from the transaction after it is consummated. As a result of these idiosyncracies in its antitrust analysis, the Division cast in doubt both the process and the conclusion of its study of the proposed Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination.

But even on its own terms, the Division's assessment of the anticompetitive impact of the propose combination should have revealed the inadequacies of the divestiture plan put forward by Norfolk Southern and now provisionally accepted by Assistant Attorney General Ginsburg.

THE DIVESTITURE REQUIRED TO SATISFY THE CONCERNS OF THE ANTITRUST DIVISION MUST BE MEANINGFUL

From its first expression of views, the Antitrust Division has insisted that on the basis of its own investigation, the only remedy for the massive antitrust violation inherent in the Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination, even as narrowly defined by the Division, would be a significant divestiture of rail lines and assets: "to one or more independent acquirers, other than CSX or any entity owned or controlled by CSX, that would provide long-term, viable, and competitive rail service to locations along the corridor [described above]" (Jan. 29, 1985 letter, p. 1) (emphasis supplied).

Underscoring the foregoing views, then Assistant Attorney General McGrath advised Secretary Dole: "To ensure competitive service, the divestiture must satisfy [a number of] conditions. . . . [T]he acquirer or acquirers . . . must demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Attorney General that it possesses the managerial, operational, and financial capability necessary to compete effectively, and to remain a viable entity providing long-term rail service along the designated corridor" (id., p. 7).

Again, in an April 15, 1985 letter to Congressman Dingell, then Acting Assistant Attorney General Rule said: "Our divestiture plan requires a divestiture to one or more long-term viable competitors. To meet these criteria, the ultimate operator(s) of the divested lines will have to be more than a marginal competitor or one capable of being made so by its purchaser" (Rule Apr. 15, 1985 letter, p. 43) (emphasis supplied).

GUILFORD AND P&LE ARE INHERENTLY INADEQUATE AS CANDIDATES FOR THE REQUIRED DIVESTITURE

From the outset, analysis of Norfolk Southern's divestiture proposals has focused on the question posed by the Antitrust Division since last spring—whether Norfolk Southern's favored candidates for divestiture, Guilford and P&LE, either singly or in combination, possess "the managerial, operational, and financial capability necessary to compete effectively, and to remain a viable entity providing long-term rail service . . ." The answer to that question, from all objective sources, has been a resounding "No."

On August 30, 1985, in a report submitted to a subcommittee of the House Commerce Committee chaired by Congressman Florio, the Staff of the ICC concluded unambiguously that neither Guilford nor P&LE could survive as long-term, viable entities in a rail transportation market dominated by a combined Norfolk Southern-Conrail. Said the ICC Staff concerning Guilford: "Because (Guilford's) assumptions [concerning the condition of lines to be acquired, its ability to provide time-competitive service on TOFC traffic, its likely additional gross revenues, and the unlikelihood of substantial diversions from its lines to those of the combined Norfolk Southern-Conrail] generally are without merit, Guilford's proposal will not result in a viable post-divestiture operation" (ICC Staff Study, p. 7) (emphasis supplied).

As for P&LE, the ICC Staff said: "P&LE's financial forecasts are far more open to question. It must be noted that, even if all of P&LE's [operating and marketing] projections are accepted, P&LE admits that it cannot service all of its substantial debt using revenues from rail operations. Substantial income from the sale of, and use of, non-rail assets is needed to cover debt payments.

"P&LE is not now a financially viable carrier and its acquisition of the new lines will not enable it to reverse its already precarious financial position" (id., pp. 9, 10) (emphasis supplied).

The Antitrust Division candidly advised Congress in April 1985 that it "does not have in-house expertise to evaluate technical and operational aspects of any proposed divestitures" (Rule April 15, 1985 letter to Congressman Dingell, p. 45). Accordingly, after publishing a solicitation for bids, the Division retained R.L. Banks & Associates, a consulting firm, to assist it in evaluating Norfolk Southern's then-pending divestiture plan. Less than a month after publication of the ICC Staff report, discussed above, the Banks organization came to the same conclusion as had the ICC Staff. With respect to Guilford's financials, the Banks organization said, in pertinent part:

"Doubts about the realism of the marketing and operating plans apply equally to the financial statements; the very real possibility that GTI would fail to realize projected gains in revenues and efficiency leads to the conclusion that survival of an expanded GTI system is yet to be proven" (Banks Report, pp. 13, 14) (emphasis supplied).

As for P&LE, Banks' assessment was even gloomier:

"Although the data provided by P&LE are incomplete and inadequate to support a positive assessment of P&LE's longterm viability, there is adequate evidence to support the view that seriously unrealistic assumptions have been factored into P&LE's planning. . . .

"P&LE's pro forma balance sheet shows that even after financial restructuring, its debt/equity ratio is extremely unfavorable reaching a level usually considered above financially sound levels.

"[T]he review of available financial data for the P&LE . . . raises serious concern as to whether a Business Plan and financing agreement can be developed that would allow an affirmative finding with respect to the likely long-term viability of the P&LE" (id., pp. 19, 20) (emphasis supplied).

In a 16-page appendix, the Banks study listed numerous issues and documents requiring further study before a favorable opinion concerning the viability of Guilford and P&LE could be expressed. To date, so far as we are aware, none of those issues has been determined; none of the documents produced. So far as appears, the Antitrust Division has not begun, let alone completed, the process by which the resolution of the issues identified by Banks could be accomplished.

* * * * *

From the day that Norfolk Southern first proposed Guilford and P&LE as its candidates for divestiture to the present, no spokesman for any point of view, other than Norfolk Southern itself and Guilford and P&LE as the beneficiaries of the proposed divestitures, has intimated that Guilford and P&LE could qualify as satisfactory candidates for divestiture under the standards announced by the Antitrust Division.

THE ANTITRUST DIVISION'S OWN PRIOR CRITICISM SHOWS THAT GUILFORD AND P&LE ARE UNACCEPTABLE AS DIVESTITURE CANDIDATES

Until last November, no commentator had been more forthright in his criticism of Guilford and P&LE as proposed candidates for divestiture than the present Assistant Attorney General himself. In a letter to Secretary Dole dated September 25, 1985, Mr. Ginsburg condemned the Norfolk Southern divestiture plan then pending before the Antitrust Division on a number of grounds, including the following:

First, Mr. Ginsburg deplored the absence of a financial commitment to Guilford or P&LE sufficient to support either carrier's burden of acquiring rail lines and assets from Norfolk Southern, providing for necessary rehabilitation of lines and terminal facilities, and acquiring necessary locomotives and rolling stock. Said Mr. Ginsburg:

"[O]ur review indicates that GTI has underestimated the amount of capital required to rehabilitate the lines it would acquire and that GTI has not yet obtained a firm commitment for the financing necessary in order to acquire and rehabilitate the divested lines. This raises serious questions as to GTI's financial viability" (Sept. 25, 1985, letter, p.2).

In contrast to the firm commitment required by Mr. Ginsburg, GTI at the time had "obtained only a letter from an investment bank stating its opinion that GTI could obtain certain financing, conditioned upon unspecified covenants yet to be negotiated" (id. n.2).

The same was true as to P&LE. Said Mr. Ginsburg: "It appears even less likely that P&LE could obtain the financing necessary to acquire and operate the assets necessary in order to provide truly competitive service" (id. n.3).

We ask: What has changed with respect to either Guilford or P&LE's financing since Mr. Ginsburg's letter of September 25?

The answer is: Nothing. Guilford still projects that it needs to raise $55 million in order to complete the acquisition and to make related rehabilitation and other investments. Some $35 million of those funds must come from sources other than Guilford's principal shareholder. To date, there is no indication that Guilford has obtained any firm commitment for the advance of such sums.

The situation for P&LE is even worse. Under the latest divestiture plan, that carrier is required to undertake the purchase of even more track than was the case at the time of Mr. Ginsburg's September 25 letter. As in the case of Guilford, there is no indication that P&LE has obtained the financing necessary to make the required acquisitions.

Second, Mr. Ginsburg in his September 25, 1985 letter said: "Also of great concern is the fact that GTI's operating plan provides no assurance that GTI will provide the sort of competition with the merged NS/Conrail that would be necessary in order to eliminate the problems created by the sale of Conrail to NS" (Sept. 25, 1985 letter, p. 2).

Again, we ask: What has changed in this respect since September 25?

Again, the answer is: For all practical purposes, nothing. Under the latest divestiture plan, Guilford will have the nominal opportunity to reach various points in the Midwest. That does not mean that Guilford actually will provide service to those points, or that it is capable of doing so. It does not even mean that Guilford will be legally obliged, or contractually committed, to provide service to and from these points. Aside from Guilford's own unsubstantiated numbers, there is no evidence to support the notion that Guilford can provide meaningful, competitive rail transportation service to any point in its system as expanded under the latest Norfolk Southern plan of divestiture. That the commodity-location markets identified by the Antitrust Division as in need of competitive relief will become theoretically accessible to Guilford after divestitures does not mean that those markets will become "contestable" in fact. They will not be contestable if Guilford lacks the where-withal to contest them.

As for P&LE, that hapless carrier's situation is even worse. So far as the public record discloses, P&LE has not yet submitted any numbers to the Antitrust Division to support the theory that it somehow will provide meaningful, competitive rail transportation service in the territories it now will reach under the latest plan of divestiture. Absent P&LE's own numbers, how can the Antitrust Division have concluded, even preliminarily, that that carrier will be in position to provide the meaningful competitive service that the Division previously has insisted upon as a prerequisite to approval of the Norfolk Southern acquisition?

Third, Mr. Ginsburg in his September 25, 1985 letter complained that: "GTI's current operating plan shows that GTI has no intention of providing a competitive alternative to shippers in Wayne and Washtenaw Counties in Michigan [respectively, Detroit and Ann Arbor]. Yet those two counties were identified in the January 29 letter as counties (a) that must be served by an independent carrier and (b) that generate a very large portion of the problem revenues identified in that letter" (Sept. 25, 1985 letter, p. 3).

Again, we ask: What has changed since September 25?

The answer is: Not much. To be sure, under the latest plan of divestiture, Norfolk Southern will allow Guilford to reach Detroit from Toledo and Fort Wayne. In and out of Detroit, Guilford's own sketchy "operating plan" apparently proposes to offer not more than one train per day in each direction to and from East St. Louise, Chicago, and New York/Boston. That one train apparently will be expected to handle both TOFC traffic (which by definition is time-sensitive) and so-called manifest or "general freight" traffic, which, again by definition, is local in nature. It is impossible to have a rail transport service that indiscriminately handles both TOFC and general freight traffic on the same train and to provide meaningful competition to the combined NS-CR. The TOFC traffic will be so seriously delayed by the local movements of the train that the carrier will cease to provide competitive TOFC service. Loss of TOFC traffic, in turn, will jeopardize Guilford's ability, even on its own figures, to attain the level of financial performance, with cash flow from operations, that is indispensable to competitive survival in the rail transportation industry.

Guilford's projected one-train-per-day service between Detroit and other points on its system contrasts dramatically with the numerous trains per day currently operated in and out of Detroit by Conrail—a number that hardly can be expected to decline once Conrail is absorbed in the Norfolk Southern system.

THE DIVESTITURE PLAN FAILS TO PROVIDE COMPETITIVE SERVICE TO ANN ARBOR

As recently as October 22, 1985, Mr. Ginsburg assued Congressman Dingell that "we will not recommend that the Attorney General approve a divestiture unless it provides a competitive rail alternative for the major motor vehicle facilities located in Wayne and Washtenaw Counties." (Oct. 22, 1985 letter, p. 9) (emphasis supplied). Yet, it is apparent on the face of the latest divestiture proposal that Washtenaw County, Michigan (Ann Arbor) is left without divestiture relief. Neither Guilford nor P&LE will acquire any right of access to that county, whether by conveyance of rail lines in fee or lease, or by the grant of trackage rights of whatever character.

Instead, under the latest Norfolk Southern plan, Guilford will provide so-called "indirect" service to and from Ann Arbor via a connection with the Ann Arbor Railroad at Milan, Michigan. The first problem with this proposal is that it lacks the concurrence of the Ann Arbor. That railroad currently reaches Toledo on its own lines. There is no reason that it will do Norfolk Southern the favor of agreeing to interchange traffic with Guilford at Milan, which lies just outside Ann Arbor on the way to Toledo. Interchange at Milan would short-haul the Ann Arbor, thereby depriving that regional railroad of its present long-haul and associated revenue.

Earlier, the Antitrust Division tacitly conceded that "indirect" service, such as that now envisioned for Washtenaw County, would be unacceptable. In late September, the Antitrust Division condemned the arrangement whereby Guilford theoretically would have provided "indirect" service to Detroit and Ann Arbor via a connection with the Grand Trunk Western at Toledo. Grand Trunk had protested that it would refuse to shorthaul itself over Toledo for the benefit of Guilford. The situation is parallel in all respects with Ann Arbor at Milan. Just as the earlier proposed "solution" to the Detroit-Ann Arbor problem at Toledo proved unworkable, so is the present proposed arrangement to "solve" the Washtenaw County problem at Milan.

Even the long-haul connection of the Ann Arbor with Guilford at Toledo is no answer to the Washtenaw County problem. Even before Norfolk Southern's latest divestiture plan, the arrangement whereby Guilford would reach Toledo provided a theoretical long-haul connection for the carrier with the Ann Arbor. The Antitrust Division's earlier rejection of the Toledo "solution" necessarily reflected its dissatisfaction with the notion that Guilford's interchange of traffic with the Ann Arbor at that city somehow could alleviate the anticompetitive problems in Washtenaw County presented by a Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination.

NORFOLK SOUTHERN HAS NOT SHOWN THAT ITS CANDIDATES FOR DIVESTITURE WILL ATTRACT SUFFICIENT TRAFFIC TO BE VIABLE

A key component of rail carrier viability is the volume, along with the "mix," of traffic to be handled by the proposed candidates for divestiture. The Antitrust Division recognized this principle at least as early as April of this year, when, in a letter to Congressman Dingell, then Acting Assistant Attorney General Rule advised:

"The Department's major concern regarding the divestiture is that the entity or entities purchasing the divested assets be, to the maximum extent possible, strong, independent competitors in the affected markets. This means that the purchaser or purchasers must be financially sound, well-managed, and that, following the divestiture, the new entity or entities operating in the region must have access to a volume of traffic sufficient to enable it (or them) to achieve the economies required to be a long term, viable, competitive force in the markets affected by Norfolk Southern's acquisition of Conrail" (Apr. 15, 1985 letter p. 47) (emphasis supplied).

As noted above, both the ICC Staff and the Banks organization have shown that neither GTI nor P&LE qualifies as a "financially sound" rail carrier. Noteworthy here is the Division's insistence upon the divestiture candidates' access to traffic in volumes sufficient to sustain operations in the long run. The ICC Staff and the Banks organization have expressed negative views on this point as well.

So far as the public record discloses, P&LE has offered nothing to support the notion that it will attain the requisite volume of traffic to achieve viable competitive status. To the contrary, now that Guilford and P&LE will compete with one another to a certain extent, based upon their parallel trackage between Detroit and Fort Wayne, P&LE may well lose traffic as a result of the latest divestiture plan.

Guilford has made self-serving, unsubstantiated claims that it will attract higher volumes of traffic to its lines, but was yet to submit credible proof to that effect. Its prior projections of this type, after study, invariably have been rejected as unrealistic. Notwithstanding those earlier rejections, coming from expert, disinterested observers such as the ICC Staff and the Banks organization, Guilford has done nothing to meet their criticisms. Rather, it has tacked on new unsubstantiated numbers (reflecting the claimed adjustments from the modifications in the divestiture scheme) to its old unsubstantiated numbers. It has proceeded as though not one word of adverse commentary had been sounded in respect of its prior projections.

Moreover, Guilford has nowhere addressed the point that it will operate under a special handicap wherever it reaches customers only by means of the reciprocal switching service to be afforded it by Norfolk Southern—which, so far as can be determined, appears to encompass the greater part of the volume of the new traffic that Guilford anticipates it will handle on its expanded lines following divestiture. For each such switch, Guilford will have to pay Norfolk Southern up to $250—a payment that must come "off the top" of the gross revenues received by Guilford for the long-haul movement. Where Guilford is dependent upon Norfolk Southern for reciprocal switching service at both ends of a given movement (which is likely to occur throughout the expanded territory to be reached by Guilford after divestiture), GTI will be required to pay Norfolk Southern up to $500, again "off the top." Saddled with such operating expenses, Guilford will find it difficult, if not impossible, to provide competitive pricing for its transportation service and simultaneously to carry a significant share of revenues to the bottom line.

Under such circumstances, it strains credulity to say that it "appears" the Norfolk Southern solution can satisfy the Division's requirements.

THE DIVESTEES' SERVICE OPPORTUNITIES WILL BE SEVERELY CIRCUMSCRIBED UNDER THEIR AGREEMENTS WITH NORFOLK SOUTHERN

A major component of the Norfolk Southern divestiture package is the grant of "trackage rights," primarily to Guilford. A hefty majority of the line "access" to be accorded Guilford by Norfolk Southern will consist of trackage rights—some 1080 miles in trackage rights, according to the November 11, 1985 Joint Memorandum, in contrast to a mere 460 miles to be conveyed to Guilford in fee.

A commercially significant portion of the trackage rights to be accorded Guilford, as well as those to be accorded P&LE, will consist of "overhead" rights only—that is, solely the right to haul traffic along the length of the line in question, from one terminus to the other, without providing local service to customers en route, and without interchanging traffic with connecting rail carriers at junctions along the way. Yet, on March 28, 1985, in a letter to Norfolk Southern, a senior Staff member of the Division said:

"[U]nder paragraph 3 of the Attachment [to the February 8, 1985 Memorandum of Intent between Norfolk Southern and the Department of Transportation], it is anticipated that the new entity [to be formed by divestiture] will provide rail service 'along the rail corridor(s) and to, from and between the counties enumerated.' . . . It would be clearly inconsistent with this language to deny the new firm the opportunity to serve the shippers along the corridors where the divesture will occur" (Weiss March 28, 1985 letter, p. 2) (emphasis in last lines supplied).

By contrast, Mr. Ginsburg's preliminary approval of Norfolk Southern's latest divestiture plan does not give recognition to the patent inconsistency between the continued "overhead" trackage arrangement accorded Guilford and P&LE, on the one hand, and the requirements imposed by the Division in its January 29 and March 28 letters, on the other.

Even where Norfolk Southern recently has expanded its grant of trackage rights to embrace the opportunity for direct local service (which continues not to include Detroit), as well as interchange with connecting carriers, none of the proponents of the transaction has quantified the extent to which those grants are meaningful. An assessment must be made concerning the specific industries to be served by Guilford and P&LE along the lines over which they will operate on trackage rights. Until that assessment is offered by the proponents of the plan, it is hardly incumbent on the commentators to seek to evaluate the latest divestiture plan, much less to determine whether it accomplishes the objectives previously expressed by the Division.

THE DIVISION HAS ACCEPTED NORFOLK SOUTHERN'S PROPOSAL WITHOUT THE BENEFIT OF EXPERT ANALYSIS AND ADVICE

Last spring, the Antitrust Division told Congress that it would have to look to outside experts to evaluate the significance of any given divestiture proposal. Said then Acting Assistant Attorney General Rule to Congressman Dingell:

"The Department of Justice does not have in-house expertise to evaluate technical and operational aspects of any proposed divestitures. Accordingly, when such proposals are advanced, we intend to rely on information we receive from the departments of transportation in the various states affected by the merger, the U.S. Department of Transportation, local shippers and such experts as we may retain to advise us with respect to these matters" (Rule Apr. 15, 1985 letter, p. 45).

Thereafter, in evaluating Norfolk Southern's initial divestiture plan, the Antitrust Division turned to persons outside the Department to assist in its evaluation. It consulted with representatives of the departments of transportation in affected States; and, as noted, it retained R.L. Banks & Associates, a transportation consultant, as an expert to advise with respect to the Norfolk Southern proposal. As we have pointed out above, the Banks organization reported its conclusion in September 1985—that the Norfolk Southern divestiture proposal was inadequate on its face, and that the evidence failed to show that either Guilford or P&LE could provide the meaningful competitive alternative demanded by the Division.

In his September 25, 1985 letter to Secretary Dole, adverted to above, Mr. Ginsburg plainly relied upon the Banks report in advising the Secretary of his conclusion that Norfolk Southern's initial divestiture plan failed to satisfy the requirements imposed by the Division in its January 29, 1985 letter.

Immediately upon disclosure of the Banks report, Norfolk Southern modified its divestiture proposal in certain respects. As noted above, it deleted the requirement that Guilford purchase the former Nickel Plate line from Crestline, Ohio to East St. Louis, Illinois (the so-called "Streak of Rust"); and it substituted a grant of trackage rights—"overhead" only—along the Conrail main line from Ridgeway, Ohio to East St. Louis. That proposal, which would have decreased the volume of traffic handled by Guilford to and from affected localities, promptly was rejected by Mr. Ginsburg, who pronounced it no more satisfactory than its predecessor.

Now, without benefit of any consultation either with the Banks organization or, so far as we can determine, with any other outside consultant, with any State transportation department, or with any expert of independent standing, the Antitrust Division has declared that the third Norfolk Southern proposal "appears" to satisfy the Division's divestiture requirements. There is not the slightest factual basis to suppose that the Division, in the limited time since Mr. Rule's April 15, 1985 letter to Congressman Dingell, has acquired the in-house know-how sufficient to enable it to perform the evaluation that only a few short months ago it confessed it could not do. Nor is there any factual basis to suppose that the Division, either internally or by recourse to outside experts, has assessed the significance of the Norfolk Southern divestiture proposal in the limited time that elapsed between November 11, 1985, when Norfolk Southern submitted its plan, and November 19, 1985, when the Division provisionally accepted it.

To be sure, Mr. Ginsburg told members of the Senate Judiciary Committee in his appearance on November 21, 1985 that the Division will look to the views of an outside expert in this matter. But that look, and those views, may be meager. Said Mr. Ginsburg:

"The expert who is hired will be asked to look at all aspects of the plan, both operational and financial, in detail in order to confirm the accuracy of the representations upon which we have based our conclusion" (Statement of Douglas H. Ginsburg, dated November 21, 1985, p. 7) (emphasis supplied).

In other words, the expert to be retained by the Division will be asked to "verify" the "facts" advanced by Norfolk Southern in its November 11, 1985 Joint Memorandum and follow-up submissions to the Division. We wonder whether this means that the expert will be asked to confirm, among other things:

That P&LE has no financing to acquire the lines to be sold to it, and has developed no marketing, operating, financial, or other plans in respect to the latest divestiture proposal;

That Guilford has submitted a so-called marketing and operating plan that consists exclusively of self-serving, unsubstantiated figures that make no allowance for criticisms of its earlier projections, while confessing that between virtually all major points to be served in Norfolk Southern-Conrail territory, Guilford will operate no more than one train per day in each direction;

That Norfolk Southern, Guilford, and P&LE have yet to negotiate contracts reflecting the latest proposed arrangements, and (so far as is known) have reduced none of those arrangements to writing;

That neither Guilford nor P&LE has submitted financials, pro forma statements, balance sheets, or any other materials sufficient to enable the Justice Department to opine whether the two proposed candidates for divestiture can function in a viable, long-term manner from a financial standpoint.

Confirmation of the foregoing "facts" would be easy; but it scarcely would demonstrate that the divestitures would meet the important public interest goals that the Division's January 29, 1985 letter set out for them.

It was, of course, on the basis of highly detailed presentations in the foregoing subject areas that the Banks organization previously was able to conclude that the initial Norfolk Southern plan of divestiture was inadequate. That conclusion was corroborated by the Staff of the ICC and, as we have noted, by every other commentator on the proposed plan of divestiture other than the parties most keenly interested in its approval.

Now, it appears that the Antitrust Division's outside expert may be unencumbered with the need to undertake such detailed presentations. He may be called upon only to "verify" such information as that there is, indeed, a line of rail track belonging to Conrail that extends from Toledo to Detroit; a line of rail tracking belonging to Norfolk & Western extending from Detroit to Fort Wayne; and the like. As the Secretary of Transportation put it, perhaps seriously, at the November 21 session of the Senate Judiciary Committee, the task of the outside expert is to determine "if the tracks are where they [Norfolk Southern] say they are . . ."

It must be remembered that Guilford and P&LE earnestly represented to the Antitrust Division (albeit before they learned they were to be the beneficiaries of Norfolk Southern's divestiture program and determined to make common cause with Norfolk Southern) that a combination of Norfolk Southern and Conrail would drive them to the wall and might well put the finish to their corporate existence. P&LE told the Justice Department that the Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination would cost it approximately $12.6 million in lost gross freight revenues per year, at a time that P&LE already was operating heavily in the red (Rule Apr. 15, 1985 letter to Congressman Dingell, p. 30). Guilford told the Justice Department in writing that "the acquisition of Conrail by NS and the resulting loss of revenue by D&H [the Delaware & Hudson, a railroad subsidiary of Guilford] could . . . prove to be fatal for D&H and threatening for the entire Guilford system"; also, that the Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination would cost Guilford up to $22 million in lost gross freight revenues annually (Guilford Submission to Antitrust Division, undated, at pp. 7, 10, annexed to Rule Apr. 15, 1985 letter to Congressman Dingell).

At stake in this battle are economic matters of transcendent importance to thousands of shippers and receivers throughout the eastern half of the United States, and to the rail carriers that connect and compete with Norfolk Southern and Conrail. The combined Norfolk Southern-Conrail would dominate rail transportation in the East. It would destroy competition in rail transportation service throughout Conrail's present territory, and beyond; it would distort competition in rail transportation service elsewhere in the eastern half of the United States; it might well obliterate rail competition among the regional carriers of the Midwest by destroying them; it undoubtedly would affect rail competition throughout the rest of the country.

Guilford and P&LE will no more be able to provide effective rail competition against the combined Norfolk Southern-Conrail than could a mom-and-pop two-seater airline against a combined United and American. Guilford and P&LE are a joke, and a bad one at that—the one is on the brink of failure and the other already is well over the edge. Guilford and P&LE will survive in a post-divestiture environment, if at all, only at the sufferance of the gigantic NS-CR.

For political reasons, Norfolk Southern may choose to keep its tiny "competitors" afloat through a regime of "administered pricing." NS-CR easily could establish an "umbrella" pricing policy that would ensure a temporary margin of profit to Guilford and P&LE while amassing a monopoly return to NS-CR. Such a regime would impose bloated rail transportation costs and degraded service upon shippers and receivers dependent on rail transportation throughout Conrail's present service territory and beyond. Perhaps Norfolk Southern would continue such an arrangement for five years—when its vaunted "convenants" with the Department of Transportation, and many of its key contractual commitments to Guilford and P&LE, all expire.

Thereafter, Norfolk could pull the plug. A concerted program of selective price-slashing, route closings, and other such tactics would put a speedy end to the nominal "competition" afforded by Guilford and P&LE (as well as by connecting Midwest regional rail carriers). The rail transportation markets for which Mr. Ginsburg now thinks he has obtained "contestability" will be at Norfolk Southern's mercy. The competitive "contest" will be at an end.

Nor will any party be able to mount a legal challenge to the Norfolk Southern-Conrail collossus—ever. The legislation urged by the Administration would provide complete antitrust immunity not only to the NS-CR merger itself, but to its "implementation" under the Secretary's plan. Neither the ICC, nor any other independent administrative agency, nor any court will ever have a say in the NS-CR operations as they relate to the combination.

Why all the secrecy? Why the rush to judgment? Why the extraordinary exemptions from the antitrust and commerce laws (to name just two of the many) that have served the Nation so well in the past? The reason, we are told, is to "rescue" Conrail. But Conrail does not need to be rescued. It is healthy, and viable; it is earning solid profits. Its indices of performance, as measured by traditional ICC standards, are strong. We ask: If Conrail is so sick as to require salvation through these extraordinary means, in what condition are Guilford and P&LE? When the time comes, who will rescue them?

Respectfully submitted.

ARNOLD & PORTER.

(By Leonard H. Becker, Dennis G. Lyons, Charles H. Cochran, Rebecca E. Swenson.)

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, one of the conclusions of Arnold & Porter is that the Department of Justice has realistically disqualified itself as being an impartial arbiter in this matter because it is really acting as legal counsel to the Department of Transportation. Documentation and evidence for that is found in the Antitrust Division's widespread assertion of the work product privilege in resisting disclosure of documents.

The Department of Justice's inability to be an impartial arbiter is further demonstrated, Mr. President, by the fact that the Department of Justice has taken a stand objecting to the proposed merger of the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific Railroads pending in the Interstate Commerce Commission, which situation poses fewer problems under the antitrust laws than does this merger.

This Senator made extensive reference to that matter on January 21, and I shall not repeat it here, including insertion into the RECORD of very substantial documents. But that conclusion by the Department of Justice that the Southern Pacific-Santa Fe merger violated the antitrust laws conclusively would require an identical conclusion by any objective analysis.

Simply stated, Mr. President, this body ought not to rely upon the Department of Justice, given all the facts and the totality of the circumstances presented in the RECORD in this case.

What we really should do, and this could be the subject of a later motion on this matter, is refer this matter back to the Commerce Committee and to the Judiciary Committee until the Department of Justice has finished its analysis of the antitrust questions, and the Judiciary Committee has had an opportunity to review those findings.

Mr. President, at this time I ask unanimous consent to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as if read in full, the letter which I submitted to Mr. Timothy Mellon, chairman, chief executive officer, Guilford Transportation Industries, dated January 9, 1986, and the full text of the letter which I submitted to Mr. Gordon Neuenschwander, executive vice president, Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad, dated January 9, 1986.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, January 9, 1986.

Mr. TIMOTHY MELLON,
Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, Guilford Transportation Industries, Inc., Boston, MA.

DEAR MR. MELLON: On November 1, 1985, Guilford Transportation Industries entered into an agreement with the Norfolk Southern Corporation and the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad regarding the divestiture of certain rail lines involved in the proposed merger of Conrail/Norfolk Southern.

The November 11, agreement is devoid of certain critical documents which are necessary for the evaluation of Guilford's role in this proposal. This extensive documentation includes financial plans, revenue estimates, balance sheets and operating schedules.

Assistant Attorney General Douglas H. Ginsburg, appearing before an "informal gathering" of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary last November, stated that these documents would be submitted to the Department of Justice, and evaluated and verified by the Antitrust Division, as well as by an outside consultant, before any final approval of the plan could be given.

I would like to know if the necessary documentation has been provided to Mr. Ginsburg's staff and, if so, I request that I be provided copies of these documents forthwith as the Senate is expected to consider the Conrail sale legislation when it reconvenes on January 21. If the materials have not yet been provided, I would like to know when they will be, and I would appreciate a list of the anticipated documents.

Thank you for your prompt attention to this extremely important matter.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, January 9, 1986.

Mr. GORDON NEUENSCHWANDER,
Executive Vice President, Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad, Pittsburgh, PA.

DEAR MR. NEUENSCHWANDER: On November 11, 1985, the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad entered into an agreement with the Norfolk Southern Corporation and Guilford Transportation Industries regarding the divestiture of certain rail lines involved in the proposed merger of Conrail/Norfolk Southern.

The November 11 agreement is devoid of certain critical documents which are necessary for the evaluation of Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad's role in this proposal. This extensive documentation includes financial plans, revenue estimates, balance sheets and operating schedules.

Assistant Attorney General Douglas H. Ginsburg, appearing before an "informal gathering" of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary last November, stated that these documents would be submitted to the Department of Justice, and evaluated and verified by the Antitrust Division, as well as by an outside consultant, before any final approval of the plan could be given.

I would like to know if the necessary documentation has been provided to Mr. Ginsburg's staff and, if so, I request that I be provided copies of these documents forthwith as the Senate is expected to consider the Conrail sale legislation when it reconvenes on January 21. If the materials have not yet been provided, I would like to know when they will be, and I would appreciate a list of the anticipated documents.

Thank you for your prompt attention to this extremely important matter.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

Mr. SPECTER. These letters constituted requests for information so that this body could consider the antitrust questions, and as of this date no responses have been received to these letters.

Mr. President, in summary, on the issue of the considerations which have been raised here today this Senator would submit that there is a powerful case, really an irrefutable case, that the proposed divestiture to Guilford and Pittsburgh & Lake Erie cannot possibly satisfy the antitrust law requirements set forth by the Department of Justice; that this in and of itself is sufficient to beat the proposed sale to Norfolk Southern. But at a very minimum these factors should weigh heavily in the deliberations by this body on taking the offer of Morgan Stanley over the proposal by Norfolk Southern.

Mr. President, I have only a few more comments to make on the remaining issues, if the Chair would indulge me while I return to my regular desk.

Mr. SIMON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EVANS). The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. SIMON. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will yield, I am just curious as to what the plan is for tonight. Will we be voting on this amendment yet tonight?

Mr. SPECTER. My expectation, to respond to the question, is that we would be. I intend to conclude in the next few minutes. The Senator from Kentucky, Senator MCCONNELL, has asked to proceed with a relatively short statement of 10 or 15 minutes. I expect that we can conclude this consideration, and vote tonight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I believe the Senator from Illinois is waiting for the floor also.

Mr. SIMON. Yes; I would like to speak in support of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. I shall be relatively brief and will conclude.

The final factor which I wish to call to my colleagues' attention relates to the issue on taxation because that bears upon the purchase price. The Congressional Budget Office has estimated that the tax loss to the U.S. Treasury would be $400 million. That really should be conclusive on the subject, except that the Treasury Department has made a submission which seeks to lower those figures to a 5-year total of $174 million loss; reduced to its present value, $125 million. That letter has already been made a part of the record.

Mr. President, I do not think it is worthy of extensive consideration, but I do not think it is determinative which figures are accepted for the purpose of the conclusion here once it is noted that the Norfolk offer has so many antitrust problems, once it is noted that Conrail is a viable standalone railroad, and once it is noted the Government would be receiving more money by taking the Morgan Stanley offer.

The significance of the Treasury Department letter, I think, is most forcefully noted in the context of the advocacy role taken by the Treasury Department just like the Department of Justice, trying to press for the administration's preference in this matter.

Mr. President, there has been an excellent analysis made of the tax issue by a former ranking member of the Department of the Treasury, Mr. John E. Chapoton, in a letter dated January 28, 1986, yesterday to me, which I ask unanimous consent to be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VINSON & ELKINS,
Washington, DC, January 28, 1986.

Hon. ARLEN SPECTER,
Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SPECTER: My firms was retained in May 1985 by Morgan Stanley & Co., Incorporated to advise and assist in its analysis of the impact on federal tax revenues of a sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern compared to a sale to public investors. In connection with this undertaking, we have also reviewed closely the federal tax analyses put forth by the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) in its June 1985 letter to Senator Danforth and by the Department of Treasury earlier this month.

Each of the three analyses (CBO, Treasury and Morgan Stanley) makes one thing clear—the cost in lost tax revenues to the federal government of a sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern will be large and will continue for many years. In evaluating whether to sell Conrail to Norfolk Southern, the tax revenue losses that would be incurred by the federal government cannot be disregarded, particularly in light of the difficult budget decisions currently facing Congress.

The Congressional Budget Office, concurring with estimates prepared by the Joint Committee on Taxation, shows the revenue loss to the federal government from a Norfolk Southern/Conrail combination to be at least $400 million, when compared with an independent Conrail—that is, $400 million in nominal value over the 1986-1990 budget period. This compares with Morgan Stanley's analysis of $359 million of losses in nominal value for the same period and $577 million (present value) for the 10 years to 1995.[1] Therefore, CBO and Morgan Stanley are generally in agreement as to the size of the income tax loss to the government that results from Norfolk Southern's ability to shelter its income with Conrail's tax deductions and investment tax credits in the initial years (see the attached Exhibit).

In its letter Treasury concluded that the tax lasses over the next five years of the sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern, as compared with a sale to the public under the Morgan Stanley proposal, are $198 million in nominal value and $143 million in present value. Although the Treasury analysis confirms the significance of the revenue loss, I want to call to your attention what we can discern from the text of the Treasury letter as some of the reasons the Treasury analysis produces a lower revenue loss estimate and explain to you why we believe the Morgan Stanley analysis produces a more realistic estimate of the revenue loss.

Losses in income tax revenues attributable to Norfolk Southern utilization of Conrail deductions, investment tax credits and other tax benefits. The Treasury estimates regarding lost federal income tax revenues are lower than Morgan Stanley's estimates because of different assumptions made by the Treasury (all of which had the effect of creating a lower revenue loss). Certain of those differences which are discernible from the text of the Treasury letter are as follows:

First, Treasury analyzed the tax cost for only five years, whereas Morgan Stanley analyzed the 10-year impact. Treasury did concede, however, that significant tax benefits generated by Conrail in the first five years would be unused by Norfolk Southern in that time period, but stopped short of estimating what the cost of using those over subsequent years would be. As can be seen in the attached exhibit, Morgan Stanley estimates that a significant portion of the taxes foregone will indeed occur in the second five years.

Second, Treasury assumed lower taxable income for Norfolk Southern in 1986 and then grew that income at a 4% annual rate, which is below the rate of growth used for Conrail (approximately 6%) during the period.[2] This seems extremely difficult to justify, given Norfolk Southern's recent performance and the fact that the Department of Transportation consistently attributes a stronger financial condition to Norfolk Southern relative to Conrail. Treasury's use of a lower initial taxable income figure and lower growth rate has the effect of lowering the revenue loss estimate by assuming that it will take longer for Norfolk Southern to utilize Conrail's tax benefits.

[1] The CBO and Treasury analyses cover fiscal years 1986 through 1990; the Morgan Stanley analysis has been prepared on a calendar year basis.

[2] As best we can determine, Norfolk Southern has not made their taxable income projections available for purposes of any of these tax analyses.

Third, Treasury ignored the deductibility of payments made under settlements with labor. Labor settlements total $375 million under Norfolk Southern and $475 million under Morgan Stanley's public offering proposal. Treasury has concluded that it cannot decide how these payments should be treated by Conrail for tax purposes and therefore totally ignores their deductibility. Morgan Stanley, on advice from my firm, has assumed a portion of such payments (that portion allocable to back wages and accelerated contributions to the Conrail ESOP) is deductible by Conrail, increasing deductions usable by Norfolk Southern.

Loss to the Railroad Retirement Tier II Fund (a federal fund). A revenue loss to the Tier II fund would be caused by the huge loss of railroad industry jobs that representatives of rail labor have estimated would occur. Morgan Stanley has developed, with input from the Railroad Retirement Board, and estimated loss of $245 million (present value). Neither the CBO nor the Treasury has estimated this loss, apparently because they are unwilling to estimate the number of job losses and because the impact occurs primarily after the budget period. The Treasury acknowledges that there would be tax effects if railroad employment declined, however.

I will be happy to discuss our analysis with you or your staff at any time.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN E. CHAPOTON.

Mr. SPECTER. Without taking any more time on it at this point, the thrust of Mr. Chapoton's analysis is that the figure of the Congressional Budget Office is much more realistic. It takes into account a more relevant period of time, and it has a sounder base. But whether the tax loss to the U.S. Government is $123 or $174 or $400 million, there is no question but that the taxpayers, of the United States get less from the Norfolk Southern offer than from the Morgan Stanley offer.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to vote yes on the pending amendment and to adopt the proposal to sell Conrail to Morgan Stanley.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. McCONNELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Pennsylvania for his statements and his outstanding leadership on this particular issue. Those of us who share his view on this are impressed with his knowledge and expertise.

Mr. President, for almost a year now, I have tried to comprehend the reasons for selling the profitable Conrail to Norfolk Southern. I have considered the arguments, one by one, yet am even more baffled that the implementing legislation has reached the Senate floor. Our consideration of this bill today is premature and shortsighted, and I hope my colleagues have listened to the forceful and compelling arguments of those who have taken the floor against this sale. In my mind, the arguments in favor can best be summarized as follows:

ARGUMENT 1

Conrail cannot remain viable as an independent entity. It needs the "deep pockets" of Norfolk Southern to keep it from failing. Is Conrail losing money? No. Is it just breaking even? No again. On the contrary, Conrail continues to achieve a strong economic performance and posted $440 million in earnings last year. In its independent analysis, the United States Railway Association found that Conrail can generate positive cash flow for the foreseeable future. Conrail's demonstrated fiscal and service performance as well as projections by USRA and others should remove any doubt about the ability of Conrail to compete effectively as an independent entity. In addition, Morgan Stanley's recent bid increase to $1.4 billion and the submission of the Conrail Acquisition Corporation's proposal demonstrate the confidence of the capital markets in an independent railroad.

I do not believe there is another argument for selling Conrail to Norfolk Southern. Since the future viability of Conrail has been established, then there is no practical reason for merging it with another railroad. Yet proponents still insist that Norfolk Southern's deep pockets are necessary notwithstanding Conrail's strong performance and the myriad of problems which would abound if such a merger were consummated.

As the distinguished chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee has expressed, I, too, am concerned for the future of rail transportation in this country. Concerns about the tax implications and sale price pale in comparison to the paramount issue of preserving effective rail competition. It is for this reason above all other arguments that I firmly oppose the sale to Norfolk Southern.

Common sense dictates that when you take two rail systems that compete head-to-head and merge them into one megaunit, that competition and its attendant benefits will be substantially reduced. No doubt some shippers will profit from the single-line service that a combined system would provide. If afforded an alternative route on NS/Conrail, they may opt for that system thus siphoning off revenues from other carriers. If a substantial number of diversions occur, as is anticipated, the very viability of other railroads and the jobs of their employees will be jeopardized. The Justice Department considered this possibility but reached no conclusions about the magnitude of diversions. Let me quote from then Assistant Attorney General J. Paul McGrath's January 29 letter to Secretary Dole on this issue:

> We also considered the argument that following the merger, the combined entity would divert so much interchange traffic from regional railroads in the northeast and midwest that some of these railroads would be unable to compete effectively in the markets they currently serve and that the resulting loss of competition would reduce consumer welfare. We find, however, that as a general matter, it is extremely difficult to estimate the size of future diversions. It may be even more difficult to determine whether such diversions would be so substantial as to render otherwise viable regional railroads incapable of providing competition in markets where they currently operate and where their exit would reduce competition significantly. Because diversions often result from lower costs to railroads of providing single-line, rather than interline, service and because single-line service is often attractive to shippers, any potential harm in markets currently served by regional carriers must be weighed against possibly substantial benefits. Hence, even if we knew with certainty that such diversions would significantly impair the operations, or even the viability, of regional railroads, this would not demonstrate that the diversions are, on balance harmful to the economy.

While diversions may be difficult to estimate, the Interstate Commerce Commission staff and the United States Railway Association have projected that diversions would be from $80 to $113 million higher than Norfolk Southern had projected. How will these losses be addressed? Layoffs, abandonments and, in the end, decreased rail options. And I assert as Norfolk Southern's market power increases, so will its rates.

Notwithstanding the potential adverse impact on other carriers, the Justice Department asserted that "any potential harm in markets currently served by regional carriers must be weighted against possibly substantial benefits." Benefits to whom? To shippers? Some certainly, but not the majority.

The National Industrial Traffic League, the organization whose members route some 80 percent of the Nation's commerce, endorse a public sale of Conrail. The following well-known national organizations oppose the sale to Norfolk Southern: Mining and Reclamation Council, American Iron & Steel Institute, National Coal Association, National Grange, Independent Bakers Association, American Association of Retired Persons, New England Grain & Feed Council, American Frozen Food Institute, Eastern Coal Transportation Conference, National Farmers' Union, American Bakers Association, American Mining Congress, and the Northwest Food Processors Association. These groups are joined by a coalition of shippers representing close to 400 companies in 38 States. And if these shippers are ultimately harmed, as they fear they will be, then they and their consumers will eventually bear the cost. Coal is an excellent case in point.

About 60 percent of the coal shipped to consumers in the United States is transported by rail. The average cost of rail transport represents over 30 percent of the delivered cost. It follows that any future decrease in competition will only increase the cost of transportation and impact upon this industry's ability to compete domestically and in the export market. The potential impact of such a sale cannot be taken lightly when over 60,000 miners are unemployed and when our coal exports have declined by 27 percent since 1981. Not only will producers and miners be harmed by this proposal, but the consumer as well.

Currently, coal supplies 56 percent of our Nation's electricity needs. Under this proposal, electric consumers will undoubtedly face higher rates through increased transportation costs. As a major coal producer in my State expressed to me,

> Such an acquisition will lessen competition and in many instances will limit the sale of coal from many coal producing areas to a very narrow market segment. It is our belief that this proposed acquisition would adversely affect the ability of all coal producers to offer competitive coal prices on a per BTU basis to many public utilities. Therefore, in the end the consumer would again suffer.

Coal is but one among many industries I have mentioned which will be adversely impacted by this sale. Notwithstanding the broad impact this sale would have on shippers in particular, and the economy in general, the Justice Department asserted that the divestiture it proposed would address the anticompetitive problems inherent in this sale. I question that assertion, Mr. President, because I question the ability of two fledgling railroads to compete with a megarailroad.

We are asked to approve a sale without the benefit of a conclusive finding by the Justice Department that the latest in a series of divestiture proposals will address the anticompetitive problems. We are asked to give the merged entity permanent antitrust immunity. We are asked to believe that two little railroads, Guilford & Pittsburgh and Lake Erie [P&LE], with revenues equal to 5 percent of the merged system, can successfully compete. We are to assume that they meet the Justice Department's criteria, that they "possess the managerial, operational and financial capability necessary to compete effectively and to remain a viable entity providing long-term rail service along the designated corridor."

Yet, in his September 25 letter to Secretary Dole, Douglas Ginsburg stated:

GTI (Guilford) appears to be so highly leveraged that it is questionable whether it can obtain the additional debt financing necessary to acquire, rehabilitate, and operate the divested assets in a competitive manner. In addition to being highly leveraged, GTI is unable to cover current debt with current assets.

I have received no information to suggest that Guilford's financial situation has changed, not to mention P&LE's. In that same September 25 letter, Mr. Ginsburg stated that:

P&LE's financial situation seems to be extremely serious in every respect. P&LE appears even less likely than GTI to be able to obtain the financing necessary to acquire and operate the assets necessary in order to provide truly competitive service.

I cannot be convinced that two railroads with combined revenues of $357 million will be able to compete with a huge system with combined revenues of $7 billion. Mr. President, we should be concerned about the ability of these two small railroads to remain viable over the long term, not Conrail.

Proponents of the merger will argue that now that Justice has given its preliminary blessing to divestiture III, the sale should be approved. Never mind that the Senate will be granting the merger system permanent antitrust immunity; never mind that attorneys general from 25 States, including my own, oppose the sale; never mind the fact that outstanding concerns remain unanswered; and never mind that the Justice Department has not completed its review and given its firm blessing. Rather, we are to proceed on the Justice Department's assurance that the new proposal "appears on its face to address the competitive concerns."

Mr. President, we are proceeding today as if some crisis is to be averted. In my judgment, we can only avert a crisis in rail transportation if we slow down. We can only avert a crisis if we review and consider our options. Because, Mr. President, we do have options. One such alternative is to return an independent Conrail to the private sector through one or more public stock offerings. I support this option and was an original cosponsor of the Morgan Stanley proposal.

In my judgment, the Morgan Stanley proposal is superior to the Norfolk Southern sale in all respects. First and foremost, the public offering avoids the severe potential anticompetitive problems posed by the merger. The Morgan Stanley proposal offers $200 million more in cash as well as stock warrants. The Congressional Budget Office has estimated that the Norfolk Southern sale will result in $400 million in lost tax revenues. Such tax losses will be avoided under the public offering because the investors will have no access to Conrail tax benefits. Thousands of rail jobs will be preserved and Conrail employees will receive a labor package worth $475 million in past wage claims and retained ESOP rights. The very existence of regional carriers will not be threatened. Shippers, and ultimately consumers, will not suffer the consequences of reduced rail transportation options. I ask my colleagues' careful consideration of this option and oppose the merger which will have far-reaching repercussions for years to come.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, there are at least three Senators supporting the amendment—Senator HEINZ, Senator SIMON, and Senator ROCKEFELLER. I shall speak against the amendment for maybe 10 minutes or so. My hope is that we could have a vote at about 5 o'clock or shortly thereafter, depending on how many other Senators want to speak, but I did want to alert the Senate and any who might be listening to the fact that we do hope to proceed with some speed toward a vote.

Mr. SIMON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I entered this whole field making no commitment initially as to what I wanted to do, and I weighed things. Then, when the Morgan Stanley offer came along, it seemed to me it was very clear that that was in the national interest.

In remarks in behalf of Morgan Stanley, let me say I have great respect for Norfolk Southern. They are a fine railroad, contributing much to the Nation. I want that railroad to continue to thrive. But I do not want it to thrive in lonely eminence in too many areas. For my colleagues who may be hearing in their offices and for those who are on the staff around here, I think there are several basic questions. One is that there are not very many Members of this body who have not made speeches saying we ought to do something about the merger mania in this country, the trend for companies to invest, not in research, not in industrial development, but in just gobbling up other companies. It is a major problem.

It is more profitable now, for example, to explore for oil on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange than it is out in the fields of Illinois and Missouri and Pennsylvania and elsewhere. Here, we have a choice: Do we encourage a merger or do we encourage free enterprise and competition? I come down on the side of free enterprise and competition.

Second, what about jobs? Here we have in this country a high level of unemployment that we are becoming comfortable with. Why do some countries have a lower rate, a substantially lower rate of unemployment than we do today? Because they work at it; because they make a priority of putting people to work. We ought to make a priority of putting people to work. And there is no question that a Morgan Stanley sale, the adoption of the Specter amendment, will save railroad jobs and it saves railroad lines so that we can have industrial growth and save industries along those lines.

I do not know how many industries are going to be put out of business if the Norfolk Southern sale goes through. I do not know how many potential industries we presently have in New York and elsewhere that are not going to be there. But it means jobs. If there is any question on the part of anybody in this body on that question, check with the railroad brotherhoods. Why are the railroad brotherhoods for the Morgan Stanley or Specter amendment? Jobs.

Why throw away jobs? Why make people tax recipients rather than taxpayers? Jobs, it is clear.

Third, is something we have not heard much about on the floor of the Senate in recent years, but it is a problem that is going to confront our Nation again, I fear, and it does cyclically. That is the whole question of inflation. How do we most effectively counter inflation? Buy having competition and keeping rates and costs down. This morning, I was at a breakfast meeting with the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania. Why was the chief executive officer of one of America's major corporations there talking about the importance of having a Morgan Stanley sale? Because he wants competition. He wants to keep his prices down so he can sell his products.

Why artificially have inflation when there is no public service performed by that inflation? The national association of shippers—that is not their exact title; I forget the exact title. But the national shippers association favors the Specter amendment. Why? A very simple reason: Because it means lower rates.

In the State of Illinois, just for example, this merger would allow Norfolk Southern to dominate rail traffic to and from 18 Illinois counties. These 18 counties currently account for $3 billion of Illinois manufacturing output, 84,000 jobs, and 31 million tons of rail movement. I have just picked a few examples, companies that have contacted us.

Quaker Oats Co., a major company, feels its total freight expense will be subject to a significant increase if Conrail is sold to Norfolk Southern. Keystone Steel & Wire, a small company in Peoria, IL, which makes nails, has already been imposed upon by policies of this Federal Government because we have not taken the advice of my good friend from Missouri, Senator DANFORTH, in this issue of trade. Keystone Steel & Wire makes nails. Nails go into Canada. Canada charges us 50 cents a hundredweight. Nails coming from Canada into the United States, we charge Canada 5 cents a hundredweight. I am a free trader, but I think we ought to have some equity on both sides. If it is 5 cents on one side, it ought to be 5 cents on the other. If it is 50 cents on one side, it ought to be 50 cents on the other. We are already imposing on Keystone Steel & Wire and now they say if we approve this merger, it is going to cost them more in freight rates.

The Chicago Board of Trade, not a minor little entity, strongly opposes this merger and by inference certainly it supports the Specter amendment. Marblehead Lime Co. of Chicago feels that they would lose about 6 million dollars' worth of revenue if this goes through. And those are just a few of the many, many shippers that could be cited.

If we are interested in cutting back on this deficit, if we are interested in moving quickly, clearly the Specter amendment provides us more dollar payoff very quickly. And I would hope we would move in that direction.

The distinguished Senator from Missouri as well as our colleague from South Carolina [Mr. HOLLINGS] sent around a booklet, and I glanced through it to see if I could see some arguments that I had not seen that would convince me. Well, it was very interesting. It lists in Illinois one of the reasons I ought to vote for the merger is that 12 municipalities in Illinois have gone on record for the merger. Six of those municipalities are Albers, Bluford, Germantown, Hoffman, Meredosia, and New Baden—fine communities. I know each of them very, very well. Those six communities totally do not have 6,000 population in a State with 12 million people. The support that is supposedly there for this merger just is very, very thin.

The booklet says, "The attorney general for the State of Illinois has alleged that a Norfolk Southern acquisition would raise rail rates 20 to 25 percent in Illinois. There is absolutely no basis for this statement."

I do not know what the rates would be raised, but the attorney general of Illinois and the attorney general of Ohio and the attorney general of Pennsylvania and other attorneys general are clear in their position because they know rates would be raised; you create a monopolistic tendency.

One of the arguments used says, "The Norfolk Southern-Conrail combination"—and I am quoting now—"provides efficient single-system service." That is another way for saying it takes away the helpful competition that we have right now.

I think it ought to be awfully clear what we should do.

Two final points. One, I was talking to one of our colleagues on the floor just 30 minutes ago while the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania was speaking. I asked him what he was going to do. He said, "I really buy the Specter arguments, but the question in my mind is can the railroad survive if Morgan Stanley purchases it?" Well, the answer, my friends, is Morgan Stanley is a cautious company that has made its reputation by moving solidly and knowing what it is doing. The people who have invested, put up the money with Morgan Stanley have confidence that this railroad will work. Any railroad which can produce 440 million dollars' worth of revenue this past year strikes me as a viable entity. I think it can.

Now, it is a gamble, it is a judgment call, but it seems to me the gamble in the judgment call is much safer with the Specter amendment.

Finally, I say to my colleagues from Western States who do not appear to be directly affected—one of them said to me, "I am not hearing anything from my railroads one way or another"—I say to them not just to wait to hear from the railroads but, if you can, between now and the time we vote on this, call your Western railroads.

There is some reluctance on the part of railroads to stand up publicly for two reasons. One, they do not want to get involved in a fraternal war, and, two, many of them have to rely very heavily on the Department of Transportation and they do not want to get into a public fight with the Secretary of the Department of Transportation.

But it seems to me clear, Mr. President, whether you live in Washington, whether you live in Missouri, whether you live in Pennsylvania, wherever you live, we are best served as a nation by having as much competition as we can, by having as many railroad miles as we can, by maintaining as many jobs as we can, and we do that best by adopting the Specter amendment.

I shall vote for the Specter amendment. I shall do it with pride. It is, I recognize, an uphill fight because not only does Norfolk and Southern have a good railroad system, they have a pretty good system around Capitol Hill, too. But we ought to do what is right for the country, and what is right for the country is to adopt the Specter amendment. I yield back the floor.

Mr. President, I question the presence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEINZ. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, I rise as a cosponsor of this amendment which in my view is an absolutely essential amendment. This amendment provides us with the opportunity on the floor to rewrite a flawed piece of legislation, a piece of legislation that, were we to allow it to go through the Senate, would seriously jeopardize not only the jobs of many people but, most importantly, would be a step backward in helping to frame a competitive rail transportation network in this country.

At the same time, the bill before the Senate, offered by the Senate Commerce Committee, is a bad deal for our taxpayers. It is not the best deal on the table in terms of what others have offered. It allows a back-door tax bonanza to the Norfolk Southern Corp. If you are Norfolk Southern, it is one of the great all-time bargain purchases that has ever been consummated.

Of course, if this were just between private parties, we would not take an interest in that. But the trouble is that it is not between private parties. It involves the American public, which, since 1976, has invested $7 billion in the Consolidated Rail Corporation.

Anybody who can buy a $7 billion investment that is making $400 or $500 million a year, get $400 million worth of tax advantages, pick up at the same time more than $900 million worth of cash, for a purchase price of $1.2 billion, has what we would conservatively call a sweet deal. But it is a bad deal for the American taxpayer. It is a bad deal for people who depend upon having a competitive rail transportation network.

It is a bad deal for those industries that are transportation sensitive, and we have many, as I will enlarge upon in a moment; and I suppose, worst of all, there is no compelling reason for us to be stampeded into making a deal that is not in the best interests of the taxpayers or transportation policy.

We might reflect for a moment on why we are going through this. We are going through all this because the Consolidated Rail Corporation, now just about on its 10th anniversary, is legally a Government-run railroad. It is a nationalized rail transportation system.

Most of us are extemely uncomfortable with having the Government run a viable, competitive, able-to-stand-on-its-own-two-feet, rail operation. Make no mistake: Conrail has been standing firmly on its own two feet for the last several years. It has made money, a lot of money, in each of the last several years—over $400 million in 1985.

As I mentioned, it has a very large cash balance, almost $1 billion. It has managed to struggle up on those two feet, make money, build its cash balance, while the region of the country it has served—the mid-Atlantic States, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, the Midwest, often referred to as the "Rust Belt"—has been going through what some people might benignly call an economic transition.

Mr. President, the area of the country I come from—Pennsylvania, Ohio, those Northern-Midwestern States—from the standpoint of those of us who live there, has not been going through an economic transition. We have been going through a depression. We have lost half the steelworkers in the mills. We have lost a lot of mills. We have lost some efficient mills.

We have lost mills where if workers worked for nothing, the industry still could not compete, because foreign steel comes in here at such a low price, either because it is dumped or subsidized, or because of the strong dollar. When you lose half the jobs in an industry, that is a bit more than an economic realignment. That is depression.

The coal industry is important to our State and many of the other States in the region—Ohio, West Virginia, the rest of the Appalachian States. We are the third largest, in Pennsylvania, when it comes to producing coal. Coal is having just about as big, if not a bigger problem than steel.

I do not mention those two industries simply because they are important to me and important to the economy of my State. Lord knows, they are. But they are also important to the business of Conrail. For Conrail to be able to strengthen its economic position, for it to be able to build up its cash reserves, for it to be able to make the substantial amounts of money it has made, competing as it does with barges, trucks, Norfolk Southern, and a lot of other railroads, when these industries are struggling, is a truly remarkable achievement. If any people think that this railroad cannot stand on its own two feet—I guess one of them is the Secretary of Transportation—they should take a look at what this railroad has done in the last 3 years, in the face of absolutely awful economic conditions in the area it serves.

You might say that I am prejudiced. You might say that I do not like the idea of some 5,000 shipping points, which now have at least two competitors willing to serve them, becoming dependent on just one railroad company, an amalgamated Conrail-Norfolk Southern Corp. I am prejudiced about that.

I think it is absolutely insane policy. It goes against everything that we believe in, going back to the writing of the Clayton Act and the Sherman Antitrust Act, the establishment of the Interstate Commerce Commission—two laws and one agency that this bill would exempt from any jurisdiction, now and at any future time, over this merged railroad.

Yes, I am prejudiced when it comes to creating a giant megamonopoly, as this proposed merger—or sale, if you prefer—would create. But if one wants to discount my prejudice in the matter, I suggest that my colleagues listen carefully to what people with the appropriate interest in this matter—people who are not politicians, but people whose livelihood depends on having competitive rail service and dependable rail service—have to say.

I mean shippers, people who want to ship their coal, their steel, their potatoes, their wheat, and virtually every other commodity and product you can name, people who do not have a political ax to grind, people who do not stand to benefit because may be a few miles of track and some trackage rights and a few other goodies are being promised by the Secretary of Transportation at some future time, or because the acquiring railroad, the Norfolk Southern, has struck a deal with a number of other transportation interests too necessary to them as part of an alleged divestiture plan. I am not talking about people who have been put on the gravy train here. I am talking about people who produce the gravy that the train carries.

The only shippers I have been able to find who are in favor of this merger are shippers who are now served by the Norfolk Southern Railroad. I do not find west coast shippers supporting this merger. I do not find midwestern shippers supporting this merger. I do not find eastern and northeastern shippers supporting this merger.

I find some southern shippers who have been serviced by Norfolk Southern supporting this merger, and what that tends to tell me, and maybe I am suspicious, maybe I am cynical, is that this is a great deal for Norfolk Southern and its present customers who may have imagined that they are going to get some kind of better deal from Norfolk Southern if they can make money, a lot of money, someplace else, and that the people from someplace else in the Far West, the Midwest and the Northeast have read the tea leaves correctly and that this merger works against their competitive needs.

Someone might say, "Well, most people really only care about what their transportation is going to cost them tomorrow." I will be honest. I had breakfast with someone today, a constituent, the chairman of a very valued company in Pennsylvania, the Air Products Co., Mr. Ed Donnelly of Allentown, the incoming chairman of the National Chamber of Commerce, our chamber of commerce in this country, and it is true that higher freight rates would mean a lot to his company. He makes, as the name implies, products out of the constituents of air and other gases and transportation costs are about $1 out of every $2 he has to spend on making and then distributing his products. He is in a transportation-sensitive industry.

He worries in the short run about the increase in prices and what it would do to Air Products, which must compete internationally against imports.

But let me tell you one other thing. Employing 25,000 people as that company does—by the way in 1946 it employed no people, it grew from zero in the way of people and sales in 1946 to $2 billion in sales and 25,000 people today, not bad—that particular company has absolutely no interest in backing a proposal, namely the amendment that is before us, to sell Conrail to the public through the Morgan Stanley proposal, if it would result, as some people have contended or will contend, that somehow that kind of a company cannot make it, that Conrail cannot stand on its own two feet.

Anyone who thinks all the shippers, and they are legion, who are supporting this just for short-term gain and they do not care whether they are going to get their nitrogen, their hydrogen, their coal, their potatoes, and all the other things that we have to move, have to move by rail, that they do not care what happens 2 or 4 or 6 years from now, do not understand the way businessmen think.

When you build a plant, you do not build it for 1 year or 2 years. You do not build it even for 5 years or 10 years. You build it for the economic lifetime of your company. Why? Because to take the Air Products Co., here are 25,000 people, most of them principal wage earners, most of them married with families, maybe 100,000 or more human beings who the company just does not want to pick up and walk out on a few years later. That is not the way intelligent, honest businessmen do business in this country.

And, therefore, Mr. President, if there is any skepticism about my statements as to why this proposal is the right proposal, or why the amendment before us is the right amendment, and anyone chooses to say that I am not objective in this, I think there are literally thousands of other informed observers who have very straightforward interests here who are quite objective and they are the shippers.

Now, I do not want to filibuster a good amendment. I do want to say, and I said this last week, that I am concerned about the integrity of the basic legislative process, when we bring a bill to the floor of the Senate when we know that we do not have the absolutely most essential piece of information to judge whether or not it meets its strongest proponents' criteria—I refer to the Secretary of Transportation and her belief that this bill must be procompetitive—when we have not gotten to a definitive conclusion on the third attempt by the Norfolk Southern to meet the competitive tests posed by the Secretary of Transportation, through a divestiture plan. What we do know is that two previous divestiture plans designed to satisfy the Secretary's criteria have been rejected by the Department of Justice, after careful study by an independent consultant. What we do know is that as of today a third plan has been sent to the Department of Justice and the Department of Justice at least as of today, in spite of having been urged literally 1½ months ago to employ an independent consultant, has dragged its feet in doing so and is—I suppose, charitably, either just inept or, uncharitably, is playing along with the gag. The gag at this point is in the mouth of any independent consultant because they have been invited not to speak.

Mr. HUMPHREY assumed the chair.

Mr. HEINZ. There are some things, Mr. President, that you learn much better when people maintain or enforce a silence than when they say them. In this case, the silence that the Justice Department has enforced by refusing to even let a contract to an independent consultant speaks volumes.

There is no doubt in my mind that an independent consultant coming in would observe that a minimum of half of the markets that the Justice Department pointed out as having serious problems—and these were just those markets with serious problems do not receive access to competitive service by this later plan; that the majority of those 5,000-some shipping points are still going to be reduced from having either two or three rail service options to one or two—mostly it is from two to one—and that is called a monopoly.

It does not make a lot of sense to gag someone independent unless you are not going to like hearing what they are going to say. It does not make a lot of sense to prevent the Interstate Commerce Commission from ruling on the competitive effects of this merger unless you do not want to hear what they are going to say. It does not make a lot of sense to try to rush this bill through the Senate unless you are afraid that somebody may actually get the details of the divestiture plan proposed by Norfolk Southern, somebody who may not be hired by the Justice Department, who may not be the Interstate Commerce Commission, but who might be credible and objective and expert and who has an opinion you do not want to hear.

I said earlier that the taxpayers have better alternatives. We know of two—the Morgan Stanley alternative, which would certainly, just in terms of cash received, provide $200 million more to the Government, to the taxpayers, than the legislation before us. There is another offer in excess of that from the Allen Company Group.

Mr. President, I thought that the Republican Party believed in letting the free market operate. I thought that the way you determined the value of something is to ask people, after you have set all of your terms and conditions and your 5 years of protection and your covenants, after you have got a deep pocket, such as public stock ownership, I thought the American way was to let the market establish the market price, to let the market establish who should run Conrail subject to those necessary conditions that I think most all of us agree upon.

And what do I find? That a fine Republican, Mrs. Dole, our Secretary of Transportation, and a Republican Senate, and a Republican-led Commerce Committee is trying in this legislation to repeal the free market principles that I always thought were the cornerstone not only of our party but of our country.

Mr. President, that does not make any sense. In fact, nothing that is being forced down our throats here makes any sense at all. What we need is an intelligent alternative.

I think the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania is a good alternative. I will be honest with you, I do not think it is necessarily the best alternative. The best alternative would be to set our criteria very carefully and let not just Morgan Stanley but other people, after setting those criteria, bid for this rail entity, qualify all bidders who have the staying power, the deep pockets, and have the ability to go to the market to raise the capital necessary.

I put a resolution in to this effect about a year ago that sets out what I think is the intelligent approach.

But, absent any consensus on being intelligent about how we rationally dispose of a nationalized railroad—Conrail is a Government-run railroad—I think the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania is in the realm of the responsible, the realm of the right and the realm of the possible. And so I unreservedly support it and urge all of my colleagues to do so.

Mr. President, I just hope that all of my colleagues will reflect for a moment before they vote on what is at stake. What makes it difficult, I suspect, for many of our colleagues is that if a mistake is going to be made, they would rather let someone else make it, particularly if people in their neck of the woods do not view this as a make-or-break political issue for all times. And I think it is probably fair to say that, other than shippers, industry, labor—a few groups often viewed as special interest—there is not much public interest in what we do with Conrail.

The average person probably does not care. And so I suspect an awful lot of people in this body—I hope I am wrong—probably really do not care as long as the problem gets solved somehow. And the best way to solve the problem is to let the administration do what they want to do, whether it is right or wrong. If something goes wrong, it is their fault; if it turns out all right, well so much the better.

Well, I did not get into this line of work just to be a go-along guy. I did not come down here to spend the last 14 years of my life here—5 years in the House, 9 years, going on 10 years, in this body—just to play it safe. Playing it safe is playing along with the administration, all right. That is playing if safe. You are not going to get anybody really, really fired up on the editorial pages. My goodness sakes, no. Norfolk Southern has hired so many lobbyists to talk to all the editorial page writers they do not know what is going on themselves.

But being safe, Mr. President, is not what this job is all about. It is trying to do the right thing. And I would like to see my colleagues say to the administration, "Look, we have the same objective; namely, returning Conrail to the private sector." That is right.

But simply having an answer when it is the wrong answer is not good enough. That is why I urge my colleagues to support the Specter amendment.

I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I have been listening with keen interest to the excellent remarks of my friend and colleague, the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania.

I noticed toward the end of his remarks he said he was shocked and surprised that the Commerce Committee controlled by his party was not going along with the free market approach.

It is sometimes true that Members on that side of the aisle seem to believe that when it comes to free enterprise and free market, the other party has a monopoly. I encourage my friend from Pennsylvania to come over, join the free market side of the aisle, and I call his attention to the recent rollcall vote on this matter that 26 or 27 of the 31 votes cast in opposition to the measure before us on that significant vote with regard to waiving the budget were from the free market, free enterprise people on this side of the aisle.

Mr. President, I rise to support the sale of Conrail. It is time to get the Government out of the railroad business. But, Mr. President, not as envisioned in S. 638. My opposition to the sale of Conrail to the Norfolk Southern is well founded. My support is for the alternative purchase of Conrail by Morgan Stanley, a sale that is clearly in the public and taxpayer interest.

By supporting S. 638 which approves the sale of Conrail to the Norfolk Southern Railroad, we are being asked to give our blessing to a plan which, in this Senator's opinion, is seriously flawed.

Mr. President, we are being asked by the administration to give our blessing to a plan which is unrealistic and would be rejected out of hand by any businessman given the circumstances that we face.

We still do not have the final report on the Norfolk Southern's divestiture plan from the Department of Justice. The preliminary approval, which is suspect on its own, came the same day that the Morgan Stanley investor group indicated its willingness to extend their offer for 6 additional months which I believe to be highly commendable. The final DOJ report will have the findings of an independently commissioned firm on the third Norfolk Southern proposal. If we are to proceed with this sale approval, as proponents of this bill wish, we will be acting in the dark without the final report on whether or not the divestiture plan will work.

This is, in my view, a convoluted procedure seeking to rush this bill through before all the facts are known. I don't like it and I will not support proceeding to this bill until we have all of the facts. I might add at this point that it is my further understanding that the Justice Department has yet to commission this independent study. This Senator suspects that the folks down at Justice know what that final report will say; that the divestiture plan simply will not work. Why is the Senate asked to rush to a conclusion before the report is furnished?

Mr. President, I have in my hand an extensive list of distinguished businesses, manufacturers, government entities, agriculture groups and labor unions all opposing selling Conrail to Norfolk Southern.

I ask unanimous consent that the opponents to this plan be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[See exhibit No. 1].

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, if this bill is such a great deal for the American taxpayers, for the rail industry, for the shipping industry, and for the working men and women of this Nation, why are so many people against this plan? Do these people know something about S. 638 that we don't? Do they foresee something if this plan is approved that some of us fail to see? The answer to these questions should be obvious.

These people oppose this sale because they fear that rail service in the Northeast and Midwest will be forever adversely impacted. They oppose this sale because they foresee a monopoly being created which will have no, and I repeat, no viable competition to keep rail rates at some semblance of reasonableness. This proposed plan is also of concern because these people see not only the loss of service but the loss of jobs.

Some of my colleagues may ask why this Senator who represents an area of the country not directly served by either the Norfolk Southern or Conrail would take such a direct interest in this matter. This Senator from the Plains has a very real parochial concern with this proposed sale. The State of Nebraska has joined with other States in similar circumstances in opposing this plan because it is, first, anticompetitive; and second, unnecessary to the return of Conrail to the private sector; and that it would, third, result in a radical restructuring of the American railroad industry; and fourth, cause substantial economic harm to our State; fifth, would not be sanctioned by the ICC—which it is exempt from under the terms of the current proposal—if presented for approval as required for all other railroad mergers; sixth, and should not be immunized from the antitrust laws.

A number of large business firms in my State have also expressed their opposition to this merger. These Nebraska businesses believe, and I concur with their belief, that the Conrail sale to the Norfolk Southern would spell the decline of rail service from West to East which would ultimately impact our State's already fragile economy. I would like to quote from a letter transmitted to me by an official of Conagra, Inc., one of Nebraska's largest business concerns just prior to the April 4 hearing in the Commerce Committee:

> It is Conagra's position that Conrail should be returned to the private sector in a way that would strengthen rather than weaken the Nation's transportation system. The sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern, a parallel carrier, would clearly be anticompetitive and a great disservice to shippers and the public in the affected territory.

Conagra concludes by saying:

> The sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern could possibly be one of the most anticompetitive mergers in the history of the transportation industry. Consolidation of parallel carriers with overlapping trackage creates excessive market power and this, in turn, translates into higher shipping costs which are ultimately passed on to consumers.

These concerns by Nebraska businesses have been confirmed by one of the major "bridge carriers" serving Nebraska. In testimony before the Senate Commerce Committee on April 4, 1985, Mr. Jerry Conlan, senior vice president for government affairs and corporate analysis of the Chicago & North Western Transportation Co. said of the proposed sale, "It could result in significant harm to shippers, consumers, employees, our railroad, and the upper Midwest economy in general."

Mr. Conlan testified that in his view the question of traffic diversions had been overlooked as well as the so-called ripple effects of these diversions on the economy of the Midwest. Mr. President, we in Nebraska have been concerned for a number of years that the C&NW service to parts of the State was in jeopardy due to the financial problems facing this railroad. After passage of the Staggers Rail Act, this railroad began to improve its financial picture. Now we are once again faced with the prospects of a reversal of their improving financial picture if the Conrail sale is approved. This will, once again, renew our concerns regarding service by the C&NW in Nebraska.

Mr. President, I believe the arguments speak for themselves. As it now stands this is simply a bad plan. This merger will only really benefit one entity, the Norfolk Southern. It will harm many throughout this country. I cannot support this plan before the Senate at this time. This is simply too important to be rammed through the Senate without all of the facts in place.

Mr. President, I am very pleased with the recent turn of events regarding Morgan Stanley's willingness to increase their cash offer by $200 million bringing their total cash offer to $1.4 billion. I certainly believe this is a further step in the right direction. I hope this is the beginning of further changes to come which will adequately compensate the Federal Government for their investment in Conrail over the years.

Mr. President, the Morgan Stanley public offering proposal is by far the superior plan. Not only does Morgan Stanley offer the Federal Treasury $200 million more for Conrail than the Norfolk Southern, it also will not cost the Federal Treasury between $400 to $800 million in lost tax revenues depending on who's numbers one believes.

Morgan Stanley would continue the operation of Conrail as a separate entity fully viable and competitive. Under this plan there will be no need of divestitures to the Guilford and P&LE Railroads. Further, the overall antitrust questions, which have caused 25 State attorneys general to oppose the Norfolk Southern plan, including Nebraska's attorney general, will be answered. There simply will not be any antitrust questions under Morgan Stanley.

An independent Conrail preserves thousands of railroad jobs which would be lost under a Norfolk Southern-Conrail merger. Morgan Stanley offers employees of Conrail a labor package worth $475 million which has the strong backing of Conrail's unions.

Mr. President, the final point I wish to make concerns not just who gets to buy Conrail, but the message the action we take on this matter sends to the American people.

In our rush to "unload" Conrail, is it the wish of the administration to sell at any price or do we have an obligation to get the best deal possible? Do we ignore the fact that this Congress adopted Gramm-Rudman in an attempt to balance the Federal budget by approving the sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern for $200 million less than Morgan Stanley? Are we to pass S. 638 because the President wrote to each of us and said it was "OK" ignoring not only the cash loss, but all of the other flaws contained in this "sweetheart" deal for the Norfolk Southern?

I ask unanimous consent to insert the President's letter to me dated January 21 confirming his support for this flawed proposal in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, DC, January 21, 1986.

Hon. J. JAMES EXON,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR JIM: The first bill that the Senate will take up this session is S. 638, which authorizes the sale of the Federal government's 85 percent stock interest in the Consolidated Rail Corporation (Conrail) to the Norfolk Southern Corporation. Now is the time to sell Conrail, to the bidder that has offered the best deal for shippers, consumers, rail labor, and all those who depend upon continued service from a financially strong Conrail. I urge your support for this bill when it comes to the Senate floor.

In 1981, the Congress directed the Secretary of Transportation to return Conrail to the private sector. The Norfolk Southern offer to purchase Conrail will guarantee the financial strength of the railroad, maintain Conrail's service in the Northeast, and maximize the financial return to the government. Norfolk Southern has agreed to a stringent set of divestiture requirements as a condition of the purchase. Through these divestitures regional railroads will be strengthened, major markets and rail gateways will be opened, and there will be the first competitive east-west long-haul alternative in twenty years.

In addition to these transportation benefits, successful completion of the sale to Norfolk Southern will bring the government a minimum of $1.2 billion in cash at closing. This payment will help us reduce the Federal deficit in fiscal year 1986. Sale of Conrail to the Norfolk Southern Corporation also will get the government out of the railroad business, fulfilling the specific privatization mandate of the Congress. The terms of the sale include, however, public interest covenants, which will protect Conrail's financial strength and service during the post-sale period.

The Senate Commerce Committee, under the leadership of Senators Danforth and Hollings, held extensive hearings on the sale to Norfolk Southern and reported S. 638 with strong bipartisan support. This bill deserves favorable action now.

Sincerely,

RONALD REAGAN.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, it has been the policy of the Federal Government to buy from the lowest bidder. Under the Secretary of Transportation's proposal, the Federal Government would now be selling to the lowest bidder. No wonder we're broke. I urge my colleagues to vote for the Morgan Stanley proposal.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, first, I would like to ask my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] whether or not he has included me as a cosponsor of his amendment and, if not, to ask him to do so.

Mr. SPECTER. I am delighted to say that I have already included the distinguished Senator from Washington as a cosponsor.

Mr. GORTON. I thank my colleague.

Mr. President, this question is not one which I have found free from reasonable debate by any stretch of the imagination.

During the long deliberations over the Conrail proposal in the Commerce Committee, I came down with some reluctance in favor of the proposal to sell Conrail to Norfolk Southern. I have since changed my mind on that subject and find the arguments for a different course of action at this point to be more compelling.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, it is only appropriate for me to say that I do feel that there are strong arguments on both sides of the question. I find myself in the unhappy situation of opposing the distinguished chairman of the Commerce Committee, although I must say I have found myself in that position before. I am sorry that it is the case, but it nevertheless is necessary for me to speak strongly in favor of this amendment.

Perhaps, Mr. President, if the only consideration before us was the fiscal strength of Conrail in the private sector, I might well favor the sale to Norfolk Southern. It might well be the case that these two large railroads, by consolidating, would both be stronger from the perspective of the market. Nevertheless, it seems to me that such a sale would be an appropriate choice only if we were convinced that Conrail standing alone would not be a viable entity. I am not convinced that that is the case. I am convinced that Conrail is potentially a strong and viable entity standing alone.

But the most important point that should be considered by all Members as they approach this vote is that there is more than one consideration at stake, more than one issue before this body. At least as important as the consideration of the strength of Conrail after it is returned to the private sector is the factor of competition.

Even if everything else were equal, Mr. President, it would seem to me that we should start with a strong bias, a strong presumption, in favor of retaining that competition.

One of the proponents of this amendment has placed before the body a map showing the overlap of Conrail and Norfolk Southern lines in the northern part of the Midwest of this country, showing how graphically those two railroad companies compete for traffic at the present time.

Certainly, many shippers, as described in the eloquent address of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, are deeply concerned about a proposal which, in their view, and evidently from a mere look at the map, would lessen competition in rail transportation. That view is shared by shippers in my own State, far from the closest direct approach of either Conrail or Norfolk Southern, who nevertheless ship their goods all the way across the country and who are bothered by what they are convinced will be a lessening of competition should the Norfolk Southern sale be authorized.

It is argued eloquently by the very distinguished Secretary of Transportation and, I believe, by the thoughtful and distinguished chairman of the Commerce Committee, that we should reject the sale to Morgan Stanley because Morgan Stanley simply seeks to make a profit—seeks, perhaps, to sell this railroad to someone else or to the general public, as if somehow or other that were an inappropriate course of action for a private purchaser or a private owner of a railroad. I find it hard to convince myself that Norfolk Southern has not made its bid for Conrail because it expects to make a profit out of it, because it expects to run it in a way which benefits the shareholders of Norfolk Southern. Certainly, it should not have made any effort if it does not regard that benefit as a likely result. Of course Morgan Stanley hopes that it can run this railroad successfully, perhaps successfully enough to resell it for more than he pays for it. That, it seems to me, is the heart of the free market system.

Our concern should simply be whether or not it is, in fact, a viable entity. Certainly, Morgan Stanley regards it as a viable entity, not simply something that will go bankrupt again and be thrust back into the hands of the Federal Government. It will have wasted all of its time and money, should that be the case.

Personally, I am willing to take at least a mild chance on the workings of the free market in this connection, to say that I think that both Morgan Stanley and Norfolk Southern know what they are doing when they regard Conrail as a valuable and viable asset over which they have engaged in spirited competition.

Beyond this question of competition, which seems to me to weigh heavily on the side of an independent Conrail, there is also the question of how much the Federal Government itself will receive from any sale. We can certainly start from the proposition that it will receive nothing like its own investment in Conrail. We are going to sell it at a tremendous loss. An investment of some $8 billion over the years has made a much better railroad out of Conrail than it was under the aegis of Penn Central, but the maximum gain which we can expect from it, directly or indirectly, if we believe all of the figures of Morgan Stanley, is about $2 billion, or 25 cents on the dollar. But $2 billion, or $1.8 billion or $1.6 billion, is still better than the $1.2 billion which has been offered by Norfolk Southern, from which must be substracted greater tax benefits which would accrue under its purchase than would accure under a purchase by Morgan Stanley.

I do not believe that the price consideration is the overwhelming factor in our own decision as to which sale to make. It is probably not as important as either of the other two—the viability of Conrail and the retention of competition—but it nonetheless is important.

Finally, Mr. President, I can say that this is an issue which I have tried to approach from a reasonably objective standpoint. During most of the early consideration of this bill, I perceived that my constituents in the State of Washington, far from any Conrail routes, have little or no interest in the subject. That is not the case any longer. As this debate has proceeded, more and more of my constituents, most particularly in the port districts of the State through which much of our commerce flows, and many of the shippers who use our port districts and our own railroads, have become increasingly concerned with the Norfolk Southern sale for the reasons I have already outlined—because they feel that it will mean for them less competition and, in the classic justification of competition, less responsive and more expensive rail service, and perhaps even a diversion of traffic which now flows efficiently through our ports across the country to the Northeastern and Southeastern sectors of the United States.

As a consequence, with three considerations weighing on one side—constituent concerns, a better price, more competition—against the possible greater security or greater financial strength of Conrail in the hands of Norfolk Southern, it seems to me fairly and rationally that we should retain that competition, that we should get that best price, that we should allay to the maximum possible extent the concerns of our shippers.

The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Commerce has quite eloquently stated, on the floor of the Senate and in the private meetings, that there are essentially three courses of action which the Congress of the United States can follow. One is the sale which he proposes of Conrail to Norfolk Southern. Two is the sale of Conrail in such fashion as to retain its independence. Three is to do nothing at all and keep it in the ownership of the Federal Government. I agree completely with the Senator from Missouri that the third of those potential courses of action is much the poorest. It is up to this body, it seems to me, to decide on a course of action rather than on a course of inaction. By our votes, both on cloture on the motion to proceed to the consideration of this bill and, earlier this afternoon, with respect to the budget waiver, a very substantial majority of the Members of this body have decided that we should take action, and should make one or another of these sales.

We are now going to make the most important single vote in this debate, a decision as to which of the two proposed sales is the better for the direct and indirect users of Conrail itself and for the people of the United States. After considerable soul searching, and after spending a great deal of time on this question, I firmly believe, Mr. President, and I submit to my colleagues that the better course of action is the amendment presented by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, which takes the highest price, retains the greatest possible degree of competition, and moves us forward to asssure that we have a secure, strong, and effective employer and competitor in the Northeastern part of the United States as an independent Consolidated Railroad Corporation.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. PRESSLER and Mr. ROCKEFELLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, as an original cosponsor, I wish to make a statement in support of the amendment offered by my colleagues, the Senator from Pennsylvania. I strongly support the Morgan Stanley proposal. There are many reasons why the Morgan Stanley proposal is superior to the Norfolk Southern bid. Many of them have already been addressed. Let me highlight just a few that are of particular concern to me.

First, a stand-alone Conrail under Morgan Stanley will not present the huge antitrust and anticompetitive problems caused by a merger with the Norfolk Southern. This is especially important to Western and Midwestern States because a stand-alone Conrail will not harm our railroads through traffic diversions and monopolistic practices. I am prepared to offer an amendment to the Norfolk Southern proposal which will correct some of these problems, but a stand-alone Conrail would be a far superior solution to the problem.

Second, Morgan Stanley provides more money for the Federal Government. My distinguished colleague from Missouri seems to agree with this point, but says that the amount of return to the Government is really a secondary issue. He emphasizes Norfolk Southern's deep pockets and questions the viability of a stand-alone Conrail. I shall speak on that subject later, but let me say now that the issue of Conrail's viability was resolved long ago by the private markets. The Morgan Stanley bid represents many highly sophisticated investors throughout the country who are much better qualified to answer this question than either the Senate or the Department of Transportation.

But while, on the one hand, the distinguished floor manager argues that the return to the Federal Government is a secondary issue, he argues on the other that we must move forward on this issue now if we are serious about reducing the Federal deficit and complying with Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. Mr. President, we cannot have it both ways. I say to my colleagues that, if they are truly concerned about the Federal deficit, they should support the Morgan Stanley proposal because it clearly represents a larger return to the Federal Treasury and a real reduction in the deficit.

That leads me to the third issue of taxes. In addition to the $200 million extra cash offered by Morgan Stanley, the CBO estimates that Morgan Stanley represents an additional $400 million in tax savings to the Federal Government.

Finally, the Morgan Stanley proposal is far superior to the Norfolk Southern proposal in its treatment of labor. Mr. President, Norfolk Southern and its supporters argue that their proposal represents a better deal for labor. Well, without even discussing the differences between the two proposals, this issue is easily resolved by listening to the labor organizations. Every major labor organization in my State and around the country is adamant in its opposition to Norfolk Southern and very firm in its support of the Morgan Stanley alternative. I believe that labor itself is in the best position to determine what is best for the workers represented by the different organizations.

Mr. President, on all these points—on competition and regional railroad concerns, on the budgetary issue, on the tax issue, and on the labor issue—the record speaks for itself. The Morgan Stanley proposal is clearly the superior offer. I strongly urge my colleagues to vote for the Morgan Stanley alternative to Norfolk Southern. As a member of the Commerce Committee who has been deeply involved in this issue, I am not prepared to say that Morgan Stanley is the perfect solution, but I can safely say that it is miles and miles ahead of the Norfolk Southern bid when looked at from both a transportation policy and a public interest perspective.

Let me add, Mr. President, that I have spoken frequently on the impact that this sale will have on regional railroads in the Midwest, the West, the South, and, indeed, even in the East. The fact is that, if we allow a monopoly to exist in this region, we will be in a situation where railroads coming to gateways and ports, ships coming into ports, or trucks coming to gateways will find themselves at the mercy of a monopoly. The Morgan Stanley alternative is much more flexible.

Later, if the Morgan Stanley proposal is not adopted, I shall offer an amendment regarding regional railroads, providing that if there is over a 3.5-percent diversion of traffic that results from Norfolk Southern/Conrail's market power there would be potential for a review by the ICC. The burden of proof would be upon the petitioning regional railroad to prove a 3.5-percent diversion existed. Then Norfolk Southern/Conrail would have the opportunity to show that any part of those diversions were not caused by its market power. If Norfolk Southern/Conrail can show that less than 3.5 percent of the diversions were caused by its market power, the amendment will not go into effect.

The point is that we are creating a whole host of problems for railroads in other parts of the country, and, although we may be "saving Conrail-Norfolk Southern," we will be creating the very same problems in regional railroads throughout the United States where short-line railroads will be at the complete mercy of a monopoly. That is the reason that my amendment on regional railroads, which I will offer tonight or tomorrow, is very important. But it is my strongest conviction that we could avoid the need for that amendment, and avoid the problems we are creating, by voting for the Morgan Stanley alternative.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I rise to support the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to return the Consolidated Rail Corporation [Conrail] to private sector ownership via a public offering conducted by the respected firm of Morgan Stanley, Inc.

Mr. President, the sale of Conrail is a complex matter, filled with exceedingly cumbersome, yet relevant, arguments and concerns about potential antitrust problems, general rail competition, tax consequences, and shipper impact resulting from the sale. For almost a year I have read and studied countless documents, listened to committee testimony, met with dozens of people, and received thousands of letters on the subject.

Indeed, amid the blitz of paper and statistics, it is possible to lose sight of our common goal—to sell the railroad, for a fair and reasonable price, to someone, who, in our best judgment, will continue it as an ongoing, efficient and competitive enterprise. But we must not lose sight of our common responsibility—to exercise extraordinary care in ending the governments trusteeship role of Conrail, and to do so with an absolute minimum of disruption to the current transportation system.

Many Senators, Mr. President, have come to the floor during this debate and recited the arguments. If you oppose the Norfolk Southern bid, if you have studied the details, and made the judgment that it would be bad for your State, and for the Nation, the following argument is made: The Norfolk Southern plan should be defeated because their purchase of the railroad would undermine the already limited competitive forces in the railroad industry—the Justice Department, the Interstate Commerce Commission staff, and the United States Railway Association, as well as many outside experts, have produced reams of paper that conclude that the sale will have a substantial impact on competition. Further, given the on-again, off-again, and then on-again approval of the Justice Department to the divestitures required to satisfy the competitive concerns they raised, the process of antitrust review is far from complete. In addition, Norfolk Southern's is a substantially inferior financial bid, both in terms of actual cash to the government, and in terms of its tax consequences in future years.

Mr. President, others tell us that to choose Morgan Stanley's plan would leave Conrail vulnerable to eventual economic decline, and would cause the "ghost of Penn-Central past" to revisit the Halls of Congress. They say, further, that Morgan Stanley is akin to a corporate raider, planning to inflict a gaping wound on the cash accounts of Conrail.

Mr. President, I give the Secretary of Transportation, and Norfolk Southern credit. They have developed a complete plan to return Conrail to the private sector. The plan is about as good as you could expect from a direct railroad competitor, and in a circumstance where you are melding two rail giants into one behemoth. The question before the Senate, though, is have they done well enough?

Is it good enough that they have produced a plan which may result in the diversion of millions of tons of coal per year, originated from my State, to other States, at a time when the coal market is flat on its back? Is it good enough that they have produced a plan that causes shippers of steel, corn, paper, iron ore, and many other products, to wonder, will I lose my business, or, at the very least, will the loss of rail alternatives cause my transportation costs to rise? Is it good enough that they have produced a plan that poses substantial doubt as to whether the $1.2 billion received will disappear in tax advantages to Norfolk Southern?

Mr. President, for some in the Senate, the answer to that question may be "yes." For these members, the loss of competition, the risk of diversions, and the windfall of high-quality rail lines, and tax benefits, are a small price to pay just to get Conrail out of the hands of Government.

Mr. President, for most of us, the answer is not so clearcut. The impact on competition and on the businesses of our various States is important. The cost to our coal miners, farmers, steelworkers, and electric ratepayers is important. The $200 million in immediate cash difference between the Norfolk Southern and Morgan Stanley offer and the $400, $600, or $800 million difference—and tax loss to the Government—between the plans, depending which estimate you believe, is significant.

Were Conrail a basketcase, were it a current drain on the Federal Treasury, we might accept the impact, the costs of selling this railroad to Norfolk Southern. But, Mr. President, Conrail is a railroad that made $440 million last year, and $435 million the year before, and there is every expectation that it will earn comparable amounts well into the future.

Conrail is not a basketcase; it is a Chrysler after the turnaround. It is a company that was in desperate need of modernization, was in desperate need of new and innovative management, was in desperate need of the time and the resources to rebuild. But Conrail is on the rebound. It possesses a modernized plant, it has implemented innovative and shipper-oriented service options, it has become an aggressive competitor. It has become highly profitable.

Conrail, Mr. President, is viable in its own right. Morgan Stanley has taken up the challenge to do what the Department of Transportation should have done in the first place. It has assumed the financial risk of returning Conrail to private sector control via a public offering of stock.

Mr. President, I am a supporter of the Morgan Stanley option. In fact, I am an original cosponsor of the measure. Yet, I will not take the further time of the Senate to provide another recitation of the facts that weigh heavily against the combination of Conrail and Norfolk Southern and for the Morgan Stanley alternative.

For my part, I reached my decision on the sale of Conrail not solely because of the statistics and studies, but because the statistics and studies bore out what seemed to be the practical, commonsense conclusion—that three strong railroad competitors in eastern and midwestern markets are far better than two.

Had there been no reasonable alternative, I would have been for the sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern, if the administration and Norfolk Southern had proven, with reasonable certainty, that at least the same, if not an improved, level of service, efficiency and competition would result from the combination of Conrail and Norfolk Southern; and if this could be accomplished without significant disruption to rail transportation.

But the fact is, Mr. President, it cannot. I have looked at the cold and drab statistics, the estimates of potential traffic diversions if Conrail were sold to Norfolk Southern, the impact this sale would have on the West Virginia coal industry, the impact this sale would have on the regional rail carriers of the midwest, the impact it would have on shippers throughout the country.

The experience of shippers in my State of West Virginia tell the practical side of the story. Any coal producer in my State can tell you that Norfolk Southern's rates for hauling coal typically exceed the rates of other railroads. An independent Conrail has been both a direct and indirect force of competition in many markets. Further loss of competition will lead to more hardship for my coal producers and miners and higher electric rates for consumers, while opening the door to increased coal imports to utilities—which has already been the case at New England Electric, and Viginia Power. These concerns are not unique to West Virginia, but are replicated in other industries throughout the Conrail service area.

If you look at these concerns—as they have been catalogued in excruciating detail by the ICC staff, by the U.S. Railway Association, by the various railroads, by the many State attorneys general, and by various State transportation departments—if you look at all these, you reach the inescapable conclusion that a sale of Conrail to Norfolk Southern is not justified. We would have ignored our responsibility to exercise extraordinary and unusual care in ending our trusteeship role.

Mr. President, the Morgan Stanley plan would take this railroad public the way it should be. It relies on the free market system on which we depend, and to which we look for innovation. It structures Conrail's return to the private sector so that the government gets the best possible return on the investment it has made. Importantly, it avoids all the negatives that a sale to a direct railroad competitor entail.

Mr. President, despite Morgan Stanley's better financial offer, despite Morgan Stanley's ability to take Conrail public without a substantial impact on competition, despite the expert financial opinion of the 43 sophisticated Morgan Stanley investors as to Conrail's long-term viability, the red herrings keep coming. It is said that the Morgan Stanley investors won't show up at closing. It is said that they have guaranteed their investors dividends that will raid the Conrail back account. It is said that the less than 5 percent contribution of CSX to the investor group will hand Conrail over to another railroad.

The fact is, Mr. President, Morgan Stanely wants to take Conrail public and allow it to be operated by an independent board of directors who are committed to the same aggressive, service-oriented, and profitable practices as current management. The fact is that Morgan Stanley has firm commitments from its investors, and a provision to cover the unlikely event of one not showing up at the closing. The fact is that future Conrail dividends will be determined by the same type of management decisions as any other company in the Nation—based on the performance of the company. The fact is that Chessie's shares of Conrail will be put in a voting trust according to ICC guidelines, that Chessie will not have a representative on Conrail's board and will be limited in its ability to buy other shares.

Mr. President, when all is said and done, the bottom line is that the administration made a bad deal and has scrambled frantically ever since to justify it. They ruled out the possibility of a public offering and an independent Conrail, and they were wrong.

Everything else flows from that decision. There is no other reason that in this time of budget crisis, we would be asked to ignore the fact that Morgan Stanely has offered $200 million more than Norfolk Southern—and avoids future tax losses to the Government. There is also no other way to understand the contortions that the Justice Department has gone through, except as the best some talented lawyers could do when the facts were against them.

Mr. President, our judgment on this issue is a commonsense matter. We can sell it to Norfolk Southern with all of the attendant concerns about competition, diversion of traffic, and about the process that the administration used to review this recommendation. Or, we can avoid the disruption to the rail system, substantially improve upon the financial return to the Government, and keep a strong and viable third railroad in the east and midwest.

Mr. President, the best way to end the Government's trusteeship role over Conrail, the best way to exercise extraordinary care in returning Conrail to private sector management, the best way to exercise our collective common sense is to vote for the Morgan Stanely proposal. I urge my colleagues to support the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania and reject the committee bill.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania and join in the positions advanced by my colleagues who have been speaking recently on the floor in support of this amendment.

First, I think it is important to make the point that we are not in a crisis. Conrail made a significant profit last year. If the Government held on to it for another year, it would make, by every reasonable expectation, another significant profit. But I join those who think it is a desirable course to move in the direction of placing Conrail in private hands. The question is, which private hands, and how?

We have two major propositions before us, and it is clear that the Morgan Stanley proposal, in money terms, would be a better proposition for the Federal Government and for the people of our country. The offering price is $200 million more.

There is some conflict as to the figures with respect to the tax aspects of the sale, but the CBO figure for the discrepancy between the two proposed purchases is $400 million. It turns by some estimates as high as $800 million. If you take the lower figure, $600 million—the $200 million on the offering price and the $400 million on the taxes—that is an additional $600 million we are talking about for the U.S. Treasury, on a price of $1.2 billion.

So it is a 50-percent difference. I dare say there is not a Member of this Senate who, if they had an asset to put up for sale and another bidder came in with a 50-percent higher bid, would not want to look again at where he ought to sell that asset. Even if you leave the taxes out and talk only about the $200 million, that is a 17-percent difference. I dare say there is not a Member of this Senate who in selling an asset that a buyer would pay 17 percent more would not want to move in that direction, other things being equal.

I think the issue in a theoretical sense was well put by William Smith, the former chairman of the U.S. Railway Association, in an article which appeared in the Hagerstown Daily Mail last fall in which he said, and I am going to quote in part from his article.

> Deep pockets versus viability. These few words frame the debate over the future of Conrail, the Government-controlled railroad, operating in the Northeast and Midwest. Some, including the Department of Transportation, believe Conrail must be sold to one of its two major competitors, Norfolk Southern Corporation, because Norfolk Southern allegedly has deep pockets that will keep Conrail out of financial trouble. Others, including the United States Railway Association, all of the rail unions, many shippers and expert observers, as well as Conrail itself, believe Conrail needs no deep pockets and is on its own a strong viable railroad. My answer to the deep pockets versus viability debate is unequivocal. Conrail is a very profitable company owned by the Federal Government. It can be a very profitable company owned by private investors independent of an acquisition or a consolidation or a merger involving any other railroad.

He then goes on to talk about Conrail's improvement in operations subsequent to the Federal involvement and their current ability to turn a profit. In fact, he points out that last year, 1985, was expected to be an up year in the railroad industry. In the first half it did not turn out that way. Every major railroad in the United States, except the Union Pacific, experienced unexpected declines in revenue ton miles in the first 6 months of 1985. Conrail's traffic fell 4.58 percent, but only Conrail among those with falling traffic managed to increase profits. Both Norfolk Southern and CSX, the other two major eastern rail systems, saw lower profits and both on smaller traffic decreases than Conrail experienced.

Mr. President, the argument is being made that says ignore the better deal in terms of money because Council must be put into Norfolk Southern for an assurance of continuity. The fact of the matter is that numerous experts, good railroad men, say Conrail standing alone holds out the prospect of continuity.

Second, and very relevant to the judgment we must make, is the entire antitrust question, which I think is an extremely important question because it requires looking down the road as to how competition in the railroad industry is going to evolve and completition between the industry and other modes of transportation.

Twenty-five State attorneys general have joined in raising important antitrust questions with respect to this proposed sale to Norfolk Southern.

A number of them, including the attorney general of my State, submitted joint comments before the House Committee on the Judiciary, and in their conclusion in those comments they stated, and I quote:

> It would be a tragic error for Congress to become an instrument in the largest and most anticompetitive railroad merger in history. There is simply no sound rationale for selling Conrail to Norfolk Southern. Conrail is a viable, independent, railroad, and the Department of Transportation should maintain Conrail as a competitive force.

We applaud the Congressional intent to return Conrail to the private sector. However, it is not necessary to destroy the competitive railroad transportation environment in the Northeast, the Midwest, and the South, to accomplish that objective.

Mr. President, that statement was made in October of last year. The Department of Justice twice has in effect found wanting, lacking, inadequate divestiture proposals made by Norfolk Southern with respect to this proposed merger. The Department has not yet come to Congress with a definitive statement on this issue. It seems to me exceedingly important that the Senate know exactly what the antitrust situation is with respect to the judgment of the Department of Justice before it proceeds in this matter.

The Morgan Stanley offer, of course, does not raise these antitrust questions, as my distinguished colleague from West Virginia pointed out. It in fact would result in maintaining, in a large part of the affected area, three railroads in competition with one another and certainly two throughout the rest of the area.

Finally, Mr. President, I want to make a point to my colleagues who come from areas of the country where they perceive themselves to be unaffected by the issue that is on the floor. I think it is fair to say that a clear majority of the Members of the Senate from those States that are directly affected by this proposed sale do not support the merger between Norfolk Southern and Conrail. In other words, those who have the closest touch with the problems of the shippers, with the problems of labor, with their own particular State and regional problems, see great difficulties in the proposal that has been brought forward from the Commerce Committee.

I really ask Members from States where they perceive themselves to be unaffected—and I believe the distinguished Senator from South Dakota made a very good point earlier when he pointed out that they may indeed be more affected in the future than they think—but to the extent they perceive themselves as being unaffected, stop and look and listen very carefully at this proposition. There is not a crisis. In fact, in money terms, the proposition which we are supporting, the Morgan Stanley proposition, is superior. We believe very strongly that it is clear, in terms of potential anticompetitive impact, that it is superior. It does not, in fact, raise those questions as the Norfolk and Southern merger would in fact do.

Therefore, I say to my colleagues who feel that they have no stake in it, that they have a stake, and if they take a careful look at the broader national interest, the arguments are on the side of Morgan Stanley—a better return to the Treasury, no anticompetitive dangers, strong support in the region directly involved and affected, unanimous support by the working people impacted by these rail operations, and strong support amongst the shipper community, although I concede that it is to some extent divided. Therefore, I hope that, as Members consider this matter, they take these various items into account.

The public sale proposal of Morgan Stanley represents an opportunity to leave Conrail as a strong, independent company, avoiding the noncompetitive effects of a merger with one of the two other Eastern rail systems. That alone is a strong argument for this amendment.

In addition, this amendment would bring a greater return by, under some estimates, a factor of 50 percent to the Federal Treasury at a time when that also is a matter of important consideration to us.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full article by Chairman Smith be printed in the RECORD, along with two editorials opposing the recommendation of the committee and supporting the proposal now before us on the floor of the Senate.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONRAIL IS CAPABLE OF STANDING ALONE

(By William K. Smith)

"Deep pockets" versus "viability." These few words frame the debate over the future of Conrail, the government controlled railroad operating in the Northeast and Midwest.

Some, including the Department of Transportation, believe Conrail must be sold to one of its two major competitors. Norfolk Southern Corp., because Norfolk Southern allegedly has "deep pockets" that will keep Conrail out of financial trouble.

Others including the U.S. Railway Association (USRA), all of the rail unions, many shippers and expert observers as well as Conrail itself believe Conrail needs no deep pockets and is on its own, a strong, viable railroad.

My answer to the "deep-pockets versus viability" debate is unequivocal: Conrail is a very profitable company owned by the federal government. It can be a very profitable company, owned by private investors, independent of an acquisition, or a consolidation or a merger involving any other railroad.

This judgment does not come lightly.

From 1974 to 1980, I was director and chairman of USRA, the organization created by Congress to plan the Conrail system, to act as a conduit for federal funds used to modernize and operate Conrail and to oversee the reborn railroad's operations.

Before and after my work at USRA, I have served as vice president of transportation for one of Conrail's largest shippers, and I am currently involved in several transportation education and research activities.

As a result of this experience I was recently invited to testify before the House Subcommittee on Commerce, Transportation and Tourism on the question of Conrail's viability as a stand-alone railroad.

As I told the subcommittee, there is no doubt in my mind that the government can and should sell Conrail. Equally, there is no doubt in my mind that, assuming a continuation or increase in the level fo economic deregulation in the railroad industry, and an economic climate no worse than the past five years, there is no chance that Conrail will be unprofitable. There is no chance of a bankrupt Conrail. There is no economic reason to fear a "stand-alone Conrail."

Norfolk Southern and others who doubt Conrail's viability cite declining traffic. Yes, tonnage has declined from about 250 million tons in 1976 to 180 tons today. But, today's tonnage is profitable, while the 200-250 million annual tons in 1976 through 1980 were unprofitable.

Conrail's management and Conrail's employees have done an outstanding job of reducing and controlling costs, and the federal government's investment of over $3 billion has turned Conrail into one of the most modern and efficient railroads in the country.

Recent numbers speak for themselves—1985 was expected to be an up year in the railroad industry. In the first half, it didn't turn out that way. Every major railroad in the United States, except the Union Pacific, experienced unexpected declines in revenue ton miles in the first six months of this year Conrail's traffic fell 4.58 percent. But only Conrail, among those with falling traffic, managed to increase profits. Both Norfolk Southern and CSX—the other two major eastern rail systems—saw lower profits—and both on smaller traffic decreases than Conrail experienced.

Today, Conrail's traffic base is profitable because of sharply reduced operating costs and because it is a traffic base specifically sought by Conrail. The company's cost controls and marketing strengths permit a "stand-alone Conrail" and the consumer's needs for competition within the northeast railroad system require a "stand-alone Conrail."

In 1976, Conrail was described by USRA as an "monopolistic railroad." To add Conrail to the Norfolk Southern in 1985 would be an anti-competitive and anti-consumer act. Perhaps such an act could be justified if Conrail were not able to stand alone, but Conrail can stand alone and a sale to Norfolk Southern is definitely not necessary.

Fortunately, there is an alternative to the Norfolk Southern. The recent "public sale" proposals of Morgan Stanley and Company represents the opportunity to leave Conrail as a strong, independent, company avoiding the non-competitive effects of a merger with one of the two other eastern rail systems.

[From the Baltimore Sun, Jan. 21, 1986]

ITEM NO. 1 FOR THE SENATE

When the Senate returns to work today after an extended recess, the first item on the agenda will be the Reagan administration's proposal to sell Conrail to the Norfolk Southern Corp. It is a bad idea that should be rejected.

Conrail was formed by the federal government in 1976 to take over six bankrupt Northeast rail lines. Since then, $7 billion has been spent modernizing the company and making it a viable entity. This approach has worked. Conrail now has been profitable for five consecutive years. It has a cash surplus of $910 million. And its net income for 1985 is expected to reach $440 million, despite a decline in freight traffic that affected all major U.S. railroads and spending $572 million on essential capital investments.

The problem with selling Conrail to Norfolk Southern for $1.2 billion is that it would wreck other, competing railroads serving the Northeast and Midwest. Shippers would find themselves at the big railroad's mercy. Arch-rival CSX would be badly hurt. Maryland's economy would suffer a body blow, with the new railroad diverting freight traffic away from the Port of Baltimore to Norfolk.

It is not surprising, then, to find both Conrail's management and its labor unions opposing a Norfolk Southern takeover. Numerous rail shippers in the Northeast and states in the Midwest—as well as the state of Maryland—also are fighting the proposal. They want to see Conrail maintain its independence. The Senate should listen carefully to their arguments.

The U.S. Railway Association, which oversees Conrail's operation for the federal government, expects the railroad to remain profitable for the rest of this decade. Projections of Conrail's profits for 1989 are $400 million—proof that the company is now strong enough to withstand adverse economic downturns on its own. Why risk devastating the economies of a number of Midwest and Northeast states and railroads to sell off Conrail to Norfolk Southern?

Yes, Conrail should be returned to private ownership. But that can be done through a proposed stock offering from a group headed by Morgan, Stanley & Co. that would net the government $1.4 billion, or by considering additional bids. Congress could write restrictive covenants into any sale agreement to assure that Conrail remains independent and retains profits for internal improvements. That is the option the Senate should pursue in its Conrail debate.

[From the Star-Democrat Sept. 16, 1985]

MORGAN YES, NORFOLK NO

Nine years ago, Congress created Conrail Corp. from the remnants of the bankrupt Penn Central Railroad and other failing railroad lines in the Northeast (including ones here on the Eastern Shore), and Midwest. Since then, the government-subsidized corporation has made a remarkable economic recovery, largely because of the efforts of L. Stanley Crane, a retired railroad executive, who took over Conrail's operations in 1981.

Mr. Crane assembled a new management team that cut 3,500 miles of unprofitable branch lines from the Conrail system, eliminated unneeded facilities and pared 21,000 workers from the payroll. The remaining workers agreed to forego some scheduled pay raises and they accepted work assignments that increased productivity.

Because of its streamlined operation, Conrail now has a book value in excess of $4 billion. The corporation has turned a consistent profit during the last four years and has $1.05 billion cash on hand, including $850 million in a cash reserve and approximately $200 million in excess funding for the corporation's pension commitments.

This dramatic turnaround began about the same time that President Reagan secured congressional approval to sell Conrail to the highest private bidder. After screening several bids, the U.S. Department of Transportation recommended that Norfolk Southern, a Virginia-based railroad conglomerate, purchase the corporation for $1.2 billion.

Congress ought to reject the Transportation Department's recommendation and preserve Conrail as an independent entity. This could be accomplished by allowing a group of private investors represented by the firm of Morgan Stanley & Co. to purchase Conrail for $1.2 billion and make it a publicly owned corporation.

Although the proposed purchase prices are identical, there are important differences between the two offers.

For starters, a public stock offering would allow an independent Conrail to preserve effective rail-freight competition in the Northeast and Midwest and connecting routes in the South and West. In fact, the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Justice Department have concluded that Norfolk Southern's acquisition of Conrail would give the conglomerate a virtual monopoly on rail transportation in the Northeast.

The Morgan Stanley offer, moreover, would permit the government to recoup an estimated $600 million in tax revenues by preventing Norfolk Southern from sheltering non-Conrail income from federal taxes. The Transportation Department has reached agreement with the Internal Revenue Service wherein Conrail's net depreciable assets valued at more than $3.1 billion would not be charged as taxable income to Norfolk Southern. Meanwhile, Morgan Stanley has offered the government an opportunity to participate in any appreciation of the price of Conrail's stock. The government would have the option to purchase 1 million shares of the corporation's common stock at $48 per share for 10 years after the stock is offered to the public.

Finally, an independent Conrail would preserve jobs and pension benefits for its employees who have made considerable sacrifices to make the corporation solvent. Norfolk Southern estimates that 1,800 jobs would be eliminated following the merger. And the conglomerate is only willing to guarantee the pension fund for another five years.

The heart of the matter, however, is that Conrail deserves to remain as an independent company. Apart from the corporation's financial comeback, it has become an effective force in the freight-transportation marketplace, respected by shippers and consumers alike. Indeed, readers of Distribution magazine in 1984 voted Conrail the best railroad in the country overall, and eighth best among all transportation companies.

Yet, the Transportation Department and Norfolk Southern insist that Conrail cannot survive the rigors of the marketplace without merging with the conglomerate. This self-serving argument is effectively countered by the numerous independent analysts who point to Conrail's strong performance these last four years. The U.S. Railway Association, an agency established by Congress to oversee Conrail, emphasizes that the corporation can continue to "generate a positive cash flow for the forseeable future" and will enhance competition in the railroad industry.

Congress should insist that Conrail remain an independent entity. And Morgan Stanley's proposal, which would return the corporation to the private sector, is the best way to achieve that worthy goal.

Mr. RIEGLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BOSCHWITZ). The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, I thank the Chair. I ask for the attention of my colleagues, both in the Chamber, and the senior staff people working on this issue, as well as those that may be in their offices and listening to this over the broadcasting system, because I rise as a member of the Senate Commerce Committee.

I have not yet spoken in this debate about this issue, although others have, and we have had some considerable amount of debate and discussion up until this point. But I have withheld speaking until others have had a chance to speak and until we could see if there might be some movement, either by the administration or by some of the other players in this particular situation, and that has not taken place.

So I rise today to address my remarks principally to those who may not have yet a final judgment as to how they intend to vote, both on the proposition upcoming from the Senator from Pennsylvania, and then, depending on the dispositon of that, on any other votes that follow.

I have probably spent as much time on this issue as most Senators serving on the committee. As the Senator from West Virginia, Senator ROCKEFELLER, said, he received a lot of letters and had a lot of meetings and certainly that is true in my own case.

I have studied this very carefully. I listened to the testimony and the presentation of the administration in the Commerce Committee very carefully. I have to tell you, I am very troubled about where I find us now in terms of the action that is being pressed upon the Senate at this time.

We have just started the second session of Congress. This is the first order of business. It is obvious there is an attempt, I believe, to try to push this thing on through in a rather hurried fashion. Obviously, those who have opposed it have taken the time to try to get at least due consideration of their position. But I think that, by itself, is a signal that something may be amiss here, and in my view something is amiss. There are some very serious problems here that have not been answered and we are being asked, in effect, to just roll over those problems in terms of an action here that I think is not justified.

I believe Norfolk Southern is a fine railroad. I am impressed by their operating performance over a period of time. They know what they are doing in the railroad business. My hat is off to them. I feel the same way about Conrail. Conrail has justified the faith of the Congress and the American people in terms of their operating performance, as well, in the most recent operating periods and there are signs that that will continue, in fact, in both cases.

But what I am troubled about here more than anything else is that we are seeing a recommendation by the administration and by the committee—not, I might say, with my vote, but by a majority of the committee—to sell this public asset, which belongs to the American people, and the value of the asset belongs to the American people. We are here as trustees in their behalf and we are being asked to sell that asset not to the high bidder, not to the high bidder, but to the low bidder. And we are not talking about giving out Government contracts now where we try to give those to the low bidder. But when you are selling assets, you are selling something that belongs to the American people. If we are going to sell it, if it makes sense to sell it, we ought to sell it to the highest bidder. We ought to realize the full value of the sale of that asset.

Now, that is not to say there are not other things that have to be looked at, because there are, and I will deal with those in due course—certainly the competitive aspect, certainly the operating plans, certainly the impact on rail labor, all of these issues need to be looked at and I will in due course.

But none of them, when you look at them, favor the Norfolk Southern package, which adds to the troubled feeling I have and why I think anybody that has not made a judgment better take a very careful look at this before we steamroller a decision through to sell something that belongs to the American people for less than full value.

I have talked with all the participants. One of the questions that I asked Morgan Stanley, I said:

Look, if you are favored in this ultimate decision by the Congress and your investment consortium has the opportunity to buy Conrail and take it out of Government ownership and put it into private ownership, how much money will be in that check that is put on the table at the closing when the documents are signed and ownership is transferred? What will be the printed dollar figure on that check?

And the answer was it will be $1,400,000,000, and that is a lot of money. And that is a certified statement by a group of people that I believe are telling us the truth. That is their offer.

And yet we are being asked to turn aside a buyer who is prepared to pay $1.4 billion and, instead, sell the same asset to a buyer who is only going to pay $1.2 billion and, right on the face of it, forgo that difference of $200 million.

Now here we are struggling with a budget deficit in the range of $200 billion. We have just passed the Gramm-Rudman legislation to figure out how we are going to squeeze down budget deficits. We are on the verge of across-the-board cuts of one size coming here within a matter of weeks and then much deeper cuts coming later in the year for fiscal 1987. And yet we are being asked by the administration and by the committee to come in here and sell a public asset for less, substantially less, than somebody else is willing to pay for it.

Well, I will be frank to say to you that we need the money, we need the extra $200 million.

Frankly, there is absolutely no justification for forgoing it.

If Norfolk Southern came in here and said, "we will up the ante," we will pay the $1.4 billion, and we will neutralize that difference. That would be a very substantial showing on their part. They have not done that. What they are saying is at the closing they will have a check for $1.2 billion. Well, I want a check there for at least $1.4 billion. So their first obligation if they want to buy this public assset is to match that offer dollar for dollar. If they are not willing to do it, I am not terribly sympathetic. But I think when we are selling public assets we ought to sell them for the high dollar, and not the low dollar.

That is just part of it because there is a question of very important tax considerations that work their way back through to the revenue flow to the Federal Government, and in the end comes down to the bottom line; namely the Federal Government deficit which is a matter of enormous concern and difficulty at this time.

The Congressional Budget Office which works for us, and is an impartial body, has made an estimate of the difference in the tax impact if Norfolk Southern is the buyer versus someone else—in this case Morgan Stanley, or if some other buyer were to be considered in a serious way.

What they have said to us is that not only is this offer adverse in terms of being $200 million too low on the cash on the table basis, but we would lose according to CBO's estimate another $400 million in terms of tax credits that would be available to be used by Norfolk Southern reducing the ultimate financial result to the Federal Government that would not be available to Morgan Stanley or presumably some other buyer.

That $400 million added to the $200 million cash on the table is $600 million. It is six-tenths of a billion dollars. That is a lot of money. It is not our money to squander. That money belongs to the American people. It represents the value of these assets.

Mr. SARBANES. Will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. RIEGLE. I yield briefly.

Mr. SARBANES. $600 million, which is the addition that the Government would realize from Morgan Stanley, is 50 percent of the Norfolk Southern offer. In other words, we have another offer in here that is worth 50 percent more than is now being argued by the Department that we ought to take—50 percent. It is not something at the margin where you say, this is for another 5 percent more or 10 percent more. There is a 50-percent difference.

Mr. RIEGLE. The Senator is exactly right. The question that has to be asked, and frankly the Senate has the first obligation to ask the question because we are the body that is taking it up. I am certainly asking it now. I am not satisfied with the answers. But I say this as well; the American press has an obligation to ask this question. Why is this being done? Why is this being done particularly at a time of national budget crisis? What conceivable justification is there for that kind of loss of dollar value to the Federal Government at this time? I will tell you something: If we do this now we should not put it just in the context of this particular transaction—since there will be other transactions of this nature.

I am told the President in the State of the Union Message a week from now is going to come in, and in the name of the private sector talk about fire-selling off all kinds of Federal assets, presumably Federal land, weather satellites again, and I do not know what all is going to be on the list in terms of things that are going to be offered to be sold to the private sector, and the money will presumably be used to reduce the Federal deficit.

Are we going to sell those things for the low dollar? Are there going to be any set of reasons or arrangements, or decisions made in a hurried fashion to sell off what belongs to the American people for less than full value? I hope not. It certainly ought not to be done in this case.

But I do not know why people are not asking that question because it seems to me on its face—on its face—we are obligated not to take the low-dollar offer, and at a minimum anybody that wants to buy this asset ought to come in and offer full value—full competitive value.

If the situation were exactly reversed, if we were in here today and the Morgan Stanley offer were the low offer, and Norfolk Southern were coming in with a high offer, I would be making the same point the other way, and properly should.

So on the dollars and cents side of this thing, something does not smell right. I do not know how to get that outside this Chamber, through the national press, and out to the American people. But it is their money. If we sell this thing for less than it is worth, it is just like stealing the money from the American people because it is their money. They put it at risk over a period of time to get Conrail on its feet, and when it is sold it ought to be sold for top dollar—not something less.

I am frank to say I do not know why the Department has itself way out on this limb in this fashion. I do not know who said what to whom or whose reputation is on the line or how this whole thing got sort of put into this kind of a situation, but on the face of it, when we have this kind of a budget deficit, and we are talking about cutting all Federal spending, we cannot turn around and say to the American people we are going to sell a very valuable asset here for less than it is worth. We are going to sell it for less than somebody else is going to pay for it. How do you say that to the tune not just of the $200 million cash on the table but at least another $400 million in terms of tax credits which come right down through to the bottom line which is the Federal deficit?

How are we going to say to the American people, "Look, we are going to inflate that deficit by $600 million because we would rather sell this to the low bidder rather than to the high bidder"? That just does not hold water. That just is standing any kind of common sense on its head. The public when they understand this is going to resent it. They are going to resent Senators who vote that way. People ought to at least vote with their eyes open. They ought to know what is about here. Those are not the only financial factors. There are at least two others.

Mr. HARKIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIEGLE. I yield briefly.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the distinguished Senator from Michigan for yielding.

I want to compliment him on his remarks. I have been listening to this entire debate. A lot of Senators have made very good statements, and have pointed out the essential flaws in this proposal of Norfolk Southern. I think the distinguished Senator from Michigan, as he has so often done in the past, in the closing hours of debate, really put it all together. He has asked the essential question, "Why? Why are we doing this?"

I am going to ask unanimous consent on my own time later to insert an editorial that was in the Des Moines Register yesterday. The editorial talked about how bad the deal is going to be for the State of Iowa in terms of selling Conrail to Norfolk Southern. The editorial writer said the Secretary of Transportation "engineered the negotiated sale for $1.2 billion despite a later better offer of $1.4 billion that would keep Conrail intact. She has invested too much prestige in the deal to back away from it." Those are not my words. Those are the words of the editorial.

Is that what we are being asked to do here, to sell this to the lowest bidder, to sacrifice this additional money that we can raise for the taxpayers because of the invested efforts in it? I mean, is that what we are being asked to do? Is that the reason?

Mr. RIEGLE. If the Senator is posing that as a question, I would hope not.

I have enormous professional regard for the Secretary of Transportation as well as enormous personal regard. I would not in any way attempt to characterize her position other than being what she thinks is right, and what is sound.

But I will say this: The bureaucrats who are involved in this, have their fingerprints all over it, and have gotten themselves out on a limb on this issue simply do not have the facts on their side.

I just do not know how we turn to the American people today, and ask them to take less than full value for something that belongs to them.

If we make this judgment this way, I think we will have acted improperly. This is not the way it works in the stock market or any other place. I hear talk about free markets, and open markets. And I believe in them. If you are going to sell something, and a public asset, why in the world is it you do not sell it to the highest bidder? Why is it under any set of circumstances you sell to the low bidder? Some might say, well, there are other factors involved. There are other factors involved. Let us take a look at them because every single one cuts on it the other way.

What about the competitive problem? I asked, in the Commerce Committee and the Justice Department. They are involved in a million and one things. Have they gotten their work done to give us a final Justice Department approval to the effect that this union of Conrail and Norfolk Southern would not be anticompetitive to the commerce of this country?

Frankly, I must say, we were given an assurance, what I took for an assurance, in the committee that this issue would not come to the Senate floor until we had that kind of an ironclad approval from the Justice Department. I will tell you, we do not have it today. We do not have it as we stand here.

Frankly, it is not right that we are here without it.

I will tell you why we do not have it: because it is anti-competitive and they cannot make the proper finding, the proper ascertainment, to the contrary. So they are holding back. The effort is being made to sort of rush this thing on through.

Frankly, it is an embarrassment. It is an embarrassment to the Senate and I think it is an embarrassment to the committee that we are here without that final judgment, making it clear as a bell, putting the Justice Department on record, that no antitrust problems exist.

That cuts against accepting this Norfolk Southern offer or whoever else might be making it in their stead under the same circumstances.

You might say, well, what about the operating plan? We inquired about that. When we were in the committee, there was no operating plan. I asked for it repeatedly. They said they were developing the operating plan. They did not have it yet. Quite frankly, there were efforts going on to do a little bit over here to try to satisfy one Senator, do a little manipulation over here to satisfy another Senator, another area, a few customers here and there to try to develop support along the line.

We do not have an operating plan as of this day. We do not have a full operating plan. Yet, we are being asked to make a final judgment and sell these assets off at less than full value. Does that distinguish us as a body in terms of the kind of care with our work that we should be taking? I think not.

What about the labor agreements? There are a lot of jobs involved here. A lot of people have devoted their life to railroading, not just in the top of these companies but down through the ranks. What will happen to the jobs of these different rail companies that are affected. Some are in my area. But to all of them, have we an answer for that?

I asked the question in the committee hearings, what was the labor plan that was being put forward by the administration and by this presumed buyer that was being favored, namely Norfolk Southern?

I was told, "Well, that will be taken care of." One can read the committee record and see for themselves those kinds of assertions were made. They were misleading. They were assertions that were made because without any firm understandings and there are no agreements today on the labor issue.

Where are we tonight? We do not have clear answers on the labor situation. What is going to happen to the jobs involved? We do not have clear, final and clear, answers on the anticompetitive side of this puzzle. We do not have that either.

Plus, we have a situation where there is such a wide disparity in the numbers that anybody who does not have a particular angle on this thing who would look at it cold would say: "Something is wrong here. Why are we selling these assets to the low bidder and at less than full value when we have other serious bidders there who have more money on the table?"

Well, the bottom line is there are not any good answers. There are no good answers because this is a bad recommendation. It has a bad smell because these issues that I have raised do not provide the proper kinds of answers that would be required.

I do not like saying it, but I do not like to see us in this situation. I think it puts the Senate procedures in a poor light, frankly, because it suggests we cannot do our work properly, when we come in here right off the bat in the second session and try to rush this thing through without the kinds of answers being available to the points I have raised here. I am disturbed about it.

As I say, I have enormous regard for Norfolk Southern as a railroad. These people know how to run railroads. I am impressed by that. I am impressed by their performance. But that does not mean that they have a right, or that anybody else has a right, to come in here and buy off valuable public assets for less than they are worth and to inflate the Federal budget deficit by at least $600 million. In fact, it is more than that because there are two other factors that ought to be mentioned just in terms of the completeness of the record.

One is the fact that there is an impact in terms of revenues to the Federal Railroad Retirement System that ought to be cranked into the equation if we are going to try to really make accurate comparisons. But that also cuts against the Norfolk Southern offer. It widens the gap.

It is the same thing with respect to the warrants that have been offered as part of the Morgan Stanley package, and so forth, which widen it even further.

This is not just a debating issue between Senators and between the administration and the Congress across party lines or what have you. In the end, we ought to set all of that aside because we are really here in behalf of 240 million American people and most of them are feeling squeezed these days. They are having a hard time sending their kids to college. They are having a hard time with their utility bills in the wintertime. They are having a hard time saving money. They are having a hard time getting ahead. They are worried about the Federal budget deficit. They are worried about the growing trade deficit.

They want us to be intelligent on these money issues. They want us to stop squandering money. They want us to stop spending on things that are not necessary. They want us to stop wasting money in other forms, whether it is $9,000 for a wrench in the Pentagon or gold plating something or poor administrative practice in any part of the Government. They are exactly right.

How does it look? Here we are about to make across-the-board cuts under Gramm-Rudman and we are going to go to the American people and say, "The first thing we are going to do this year is take this major asset you have been investing in and we are going to sell it. But we are not going to sell it for what it is worth. We are going to sell it for less. You will get less than your money's worth. That is how serious the financial problem is around here, that we are going to give away $600 million."

That is unfair competition. If you were selling this on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, you would sell it to the high bidder, not the low bidder. It is only when the bureaucracy gets involved. We are selling assets at less than the full value to the low bidder rather than the high bidder. There is no justification on its face.

They would do that right today with the Federal budget deficit where it is and that is the bottom line, that there is a bottom line on this transaction. The bottom line says to us that we are absolutely unjustified on any grounds in accepting this recommendation from the Commerce Committee and it ought not to have been made.

I appreciate my colleagues and senior staff members for listening to my thoughts on this. I feel strongly about it, as I said. I have spoken about it before. I hope that I can see something done here to try to adjust this thing and try to make it more realistic. At the point we are now it is a sham. At least the public ought to understand what is happening here. If we are going to squander the public's money they ought to know we are doing it, and at the same time when we vote we would have a way to track where everybody is on this issue.

I am upset about it. Here we are, we are going to cut everything else—UDAG grants, veterans' pensions, and a lot of other things—because we do not have enough money. But we have enough money to give away, in effect, $600 million of the public's money. Well, not with my vote. Not with my vote.

If we can settle the other issues, the operating plan, settle the anticompetitive aspects and maybe some adjustments that need to be made, and if Norfolk Southern is willing to walk in here and pay the same price that someone else is willing to pay, including the offset for the tax benefits, then they will find somebody who will be very sympathetic to the sale to them. I am open to it. That would be an even-steven proposition. That is something where the American people would be getting a fair shake. But anything less than that is not a fair shake. It is not a fair shake and I do not care how you dress it up because the numbers tell the story.

I hope that we would sell this to the high bidder. If Norfolk Southern wants to adjust its proposition and make itself the high bidder, that is fine with me, assuming the other situations that I have mentioned are already attended to, or Morgan Stanley or anyone else who wants to come along. There is another investor group that has indicated it is interested in buying it. But I am not prepared to shut the bidding down or to give it away to someone who is not prepared to pay the fair price or the full price. That is what we are proposing here. I would like to see it so at least the cards are out on the table.

Let us make no mistake about what is happening here. People ought to vote with their eyes open when they vote.

I conclude by saying I hope the senior staff will bring these facts to light, bring them to the attention of those Senators who may not have been here when these remarks were made. They are going to have to live with these facts. We are all going to have to live with these facts, because those are the facts. I wish they were otherwise.

So the Senate is going to have to decide to accept or not to accept the recommendation here unless there are fundamental adjustments in it and send this back to the committee, which would be one option. It is pretty hard to pick and choose between proposals or decide which we ought to pick, although on its face today, the Morgan Stanley offer is a far better offer, a far larger offer financially and solves the competitive problems that Norfolk Southern creates and does not solve. If we do not do that, we ought to go back and make an honest, careful effort to sell these assets for full value and not for something substantially less.

We cannot play favorites, I hope, in terms of something as important as this and with the financial crisis we have on our hands.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

MORGAN STANLEY PLAN—THE SUPERIOR CONRAIL SALE ALTERNATIVE

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, the Senate has before it two alternatives for selling Conrail: the Norfolk Southern proposal, as recommended by the Secretary of Transportation, and the Morgan Stanley public offering proposal.

Let me say at the outset that I have the greatest respect for the Secretary of Transportation. She has worked hard and long in an effort to return Conrail to private ownership. I appreciate her efforts, and her openness and willingness to consult with me and other interested Senators as the extremely long sales process moved along.

I would also like to say that I am among the first to acknowledge that the Norfolk Southern is one of the best run railroads in the United States—and it may well be the best run. Norfolk Southern has been efficient. It has provided high-quality, cost-effective service to its customers, and no one can doubt its reputation as an innovator.

It pains me, therefore, to be opposing the Secretary of Transportation and the Norfolk Southern on this Conrail sale issue. I share their desire to see Conrail rapidly returned to the private sector, and I agree that Congress should sell Conrail in a manner that will ensure that we will not have the railroad back in our laps in another 5 or 10 years.

While I would like to be supporting Norfolk Southern, I cannot. The reason I cannot is that there is a far superior offer now on the table—the Morgan Stanley public offering proposal. Morgan Stanley provides a far greater return to the Treasury than Norfolk Southern, and it avoids the serious antitrust problems raised by a Conrail-Norfolk Southern merger.

The Morgan Stanley investment group, Mr. President, consists of 43 investors that can only be characterized as the "bluest of the blue chip." They are not fly-by-night operators. They are institutions, like Columbia, Harvard, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Dreyfus Corp., New York Life Insurance, and T. Rowe Price Associates, Inc. Yet, these hard-nosed, conservative investors are willing to put up $1.4 billion in cash on day of closing for the Government's 85 percent share of Conrail—$200 million more than Norfolk Southern is offering.

In addition, according to the Congressional Budget Office, the Morgan Stanley plan means approximately $400 million more in tax revenues to the Treasury than Norfolk Southern's proposal. Finally, the Morgan Stanley investor group is willing to provide the Government with warrants on the new Conrail stock, which provides the Government with an opportunity for a still higher return on the sale.

The net result is that the Morgan Stanley plan is worth at least $600 million more to the Treasury than Norfolk Southern's offer. Let me repeat that for my colleagues. Morgan Stanley is offering over $600 million more than Norfolk Southern. I won't quote one of my distinguished predecessors from Illinois, Senator Everett McKinley Dirksen, on whether $600 million is a significant sum; I am confident that even in this era of $200 billion plus annual budget deficits, the Senate recognizes that $600 million is a lot of money; $600 million represents roughly 20 percent of the over $3 billion the Government invested directly in Conrail.

Even more importantly, it represents over 5 percent of the amount scheduled to be cut under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings on March 1 of this year. We are facing a budget deficit that could exceed $220 billion. the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit reduction targets mean we will have to find perhaps as much as $75 billion in cuts for fiscal 1987. Six hundred million dollars may not look large when compared with those appalling numbers, but given the wrenching cuts we will have to be making, I don't see how we can possibly afford to pass up a bid that is so much more financially attractive.

I think it is especially difficult to even consider the lower Norfolk Southern bid, Mr. President, because of the major antitrust problems a Conrail-Norfolk Southern merger presents. I will not take the time of the Senate to discuss the antitrust problems at length. I made a long statement on the problems earlier this week. Let me simply say at this time that the competitive problems an NS-Conrail merger would present are widely known. The staff of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the United States Railway Association, 25 State attorneys general, railway labor, literally hundreds of shippers, cities and local communities, States, and railroads that connect and compete with Conrail and Norfolk Southern have all provided clear and convincing evidence of the antitrust problems the Norfolk Southern proposal causes.

Even the Department of Justice acknowledges that a Conrail-Norfolk Southern merger is anticompetitive. In fact, the Department's own figures indicate that the antitrust problems of a Norfolk Southern-Conrail merger are over twice the size of those presented by another railroad merger the Department is currently reviewing, the proposed Santa Fe-Southern Pacific merger. The San Fe case is particularly relevant because Justice is arguing that the anticompetitive problems presented by that merger—though less than half the size of Norfolk Southern-Conrail—cannot be resolved by any divestiture proposal. They are just too serious.

Norfolk Southern is aware that its proposal is seriously flawed on antitrust grounds and has proposed three different divestiture proposals in an attempt to alleviate at least some of the problems. Their first proposal, the only one to get any kind of real independent review, was rejected as inadequate, as was the second. Justice has said that the third proposal "appears on its face" to resolve its concerns, but Justice has yet to even hire the independent consultant it said it wanted to review the proposal, suggesting Justice was afraid of what an independent review might find. Justice admits it does not have most of the information needed to make an informed judgment on the adequacy of the third divestiture proposal, and those who would be adversely affected by the proposed transaction have had no opportunity to review the proposal in detail, and no forum in which to raise objections or concerns.

Further, the proposal addresses only part of the antitrust problems, and it is difficult to see how even that partial solution could be successful. The third divestiture plan, like the previous two rejected plans, depends on two very maginal railroads—Guilford and the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie—to provide competition for the proposed giant Conrail-Norfolk Southern system. It is much more likely that Guilford's and the P&LE's very existence would be at the sufferance of Norfolk Southern. These small railroads' financial condition can be easily summarized. If this were 1976 instead of 1986, there would be no discussion of whether they could provide viable competition to Conrail-Norfolk Southern; instead, they would have been included with the other bankrupt carriers that formed Conrail.

The Senate can avoid these antitrust problems very easily, Mr. President, by choosing the Morgan Stanley public offering proposal. Morgan Stanley, by keeping Conrail independent, preserves the competitive status quo and avoids any antitrust concerns.

Now some may argue that it makes no difference that Morgan Stanley is offering more money and that it avoids antitrust problems because only Norfolk Southern provides long-term assurance that Conrail will not again become a ward of the Government.

I was initially skeptical of Conrail's ability to survive and prosper over the long-term. For a long time, I was somewhat inclined toward the idea of using the "401" process to sell Conrail. Under that procedure, the Secretary could sell Conrail in pieces to individual railroads and others, which also avoids anticompetitive problems and would also work to maximize the return on the Government's investment in Conrail.

Careful analysis of Conrail, however, has convinced me that it can and will be viable over the long term. Conrail has been profitable for the past 5 years, and has had positive cash flow during that period. Further, the evidence is convincing that Conrail has become a lot more efficient then it was in 1976, and that it now provides high-quality, cost-efficient service to its customers. Independent analysts such as the United States Railway Association also confirm that Conrail is financially viable.

There are literally mountains of evidence that conclusively demonstrate Conrail's ability to survive and prosper as an independent carrier. I won't take the Senate's time to cite a lot of figures to show that Conrail is in sound financial health. Instead, I'd like to briefly discuss just one reason that to me provides very persuasive evidence of Conrail's viability—the sale process itself.

When the Department of Transportation asked for bids on Conrail, it did not receive one or two reluctant bids, as it might if Conrail were widely perceived as an economic failure. Rather, it got 15 bids—15—which seems to me to indicate that a lot of very sophisticated people believe Conrail is a good investment and can make it on its own.

One of the bidders was the Norfolk Southern Corp. As I stated earlier, I have the greatest respect for NS. It is a hard-nosed, well-run corporation, and it does not have a reputation for wasting its money. And unless I am greatly misinformed, it is not a charitable enterprise. It does not make investments that it does not believe will be profitable.

Yet there seems to be some feeling that Norfolk Southern will use its "deep pockets" to protect and support the "marginal" Conrail system. Nothing could be further from the truth. The history of the Norfolk Southern and its predecessor railroads demonstrates that they do not put good money after bad to subsidize unprofitable operations. The Norfolk & Western never did so with the Delaware & Hudson, the railroad that is now a part of Guilford, and I think it is illogical to suggest that it might do so now.

The simple truth is that Norfolk Southern wants Conrail because it believes Conrail to be profitable. It is wishful thinking to believe they would operate any part of the Conrail system for long if they could not make money doing so.

Now some might argue that efficiencies in a combined Norfolk Southern-Conrail system makes acquisition of Conrail for NS more profitable than it would be for other buyers. I can't buy that argument either, Mr. President, unless we're talking about the monopoly profits that would result from this kind of anticompetitive combination. The distinguished Administrator of the Federal Railroad Administration, John Riley, spoke before a group of eastern railroad officials last fall. At that meeting, he argued that there would not soon be any transcontinental mergers because the efficiencies were just not there. I agree with Mr. Riley, and I think his argument applies just as well to the proposed Conrail-Norfolk Southern transaction.

It seems to me that those that express the concern over Conrail potentially coming back for Federal assistance are afraid—afraid to acknowledge that Conrail represents a Federal success. Conrail is now a different railroad than it was in 1976. It is smaller; it has less traffic, but it is much more efficient and it now generates consistent profits instead of losses. Further, Conrail is operating in a changed regulatory environment. Passage of the Staggers Deregulation Act gave Conrail the freedom it needed to become profitable, and it has made good use of that opportunity.

Let me conclude by repeating that Conrail can make it on its own. I hope my colleagues will join me, therefore, in supporting the Morgan Stanley public offering proposal. It avoids the antitrust problems raised by Norfolk Southern. It provides over $600 million more to the Government than Norfolk Southern. And it provides equal assurance that it will never again be necessary for the Government to assume ownership of Conrail.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I have given much thought to the sale of Conrail to either the Norfolk Southern or to the Morgan Stanley investment group.

I have also asked the Iowa Department of Transportation to look at the different offers that have been considered and to give me their views on the different options.

The President is proposing the sale of some Federal assets in the future through his Privatization Program. I am basically, but not totally, supportive of this program. I will make my decision on a case-by-case basis.

I feel that the Government should be getting more money for this railroad than is being offered today. We cannot send the wrong message to others who will be bidding on other Government property that we will not be going for the top dollar when we sell off through the Privatization Program.

Because of this concern and that of the Iowa Department of Transportation, I have decided to vote against the Morgan Stanley offer. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD today a copy of a letter that I received from the Iowa Department of Transportation regarding the Morgan Stanley offer.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IOWA DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION,
Ames, IA.

HON. CHARLES GRASSLEY,
U.S. Senator, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR GRASSLEY: Thanks for asking whether the DOT would support the sale of Conrail to Morgan Stanley, or whether we think the government can get a better offer.

When the Commissioners voted on the issue, they wanted above all else to insure a healthy railroad business continues to exist in the Midwest. Their second concern, expressed by Chairman Rigler, was that the taxpayer get the best return on investment. For those reasons, the Commission did not endorse either offer and urged "the administration to pursue a sale more in the best interest of the taxpayers who have made such a huge investment in Conrail, and a sale that will insure competition among the several railroads providing essential, efficient service to the midwest and to the entire nation."

If the Norfolk Southern were to provide iron-clad agreements to the midwestern railroads which satisfy the railroads' concerns, our objections to that company buying Conrail would diminish substantially. Even so, we are convinced Conrail is worth more than either Morgan Stanley or the Norfolk Southern purchase offer. I am enclosing a recent Forbes interview with railroad expert Isabel H. Benham substantiating this viewpoint.

Our folks are closely monitoring developments related to Conrail and I'll be in touch if something significant develops. In the meantime, if you'd like more detailed information, please call me.

Sincerely,

WARREN B. DUNHAM,
Director.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I will vote against tabling Senator SPECTER's amendment to sell Conrail to Morgan Stanley after having carefully considered the impact of a sale to Norfolk Southern on the State of Michigan. When the Department of Justice gave preliminary approval to the third version of Norfolk Southern's divestiture plan, I asked the Michigan Department of Transportation about their views relative to the administration's proposal. The Department informed me that, based on the latest divestiture plan, a sale to Norfolk Southern would not be in the best interest of the State of Michigan because it does not adequately address the anticompetitive aspects of the sale. The Department is probably in the best position to evaluate the impact of a merger between Conrail and Norfolk Southern on shippers, other railroads, labor, and consumers in my State, and therefore I am inclined to give great weight to the Department's recommendation.

The Michigan Department of Transportation has written a letter to me which outlines their specific concerns regarding the proposed sale to Norfolk Southern and I have made this letter available to Norfolk Southern. There is, of course, still a possibility that some or all of these concerns will be addressed in further negotiations. However, based on the current divestiture plan and the Michigan Department of Transportation's reaction to it, I have determined that a vote in favor of Morgan Stanley is in the best interest of my State.

Mr. President, a sale to Morgan Stanley is also in the best interest of the Nation for the following reasons: First, there is every reason to believe that Conrail can weather future declines in our economy and continue to exist as an independent entity. Maintaining an independent Conrail avoids the competition problems raised by the Norfolk Southern proposal. Second, a sale to Morgan Stanley will bring at least $200 million more to the Federal Treasury than will a sale to Norfolk Southern. Third, the Morgan Stanley plan allows employees to continue to participate in Conrail's Employee Stock Ownership Plan and gives the public an opportunity to invest in the future of Conrail.

Mr. President, I have also weighed the no sale option. A decision to maintain the status quo with respect to Conrail would be at odds with previous congressional directives and would prevent us from recouping some of our investment in Conrail at a time when it is needed to reduce the Federal budget deficit. Additionally, proponents and opponents of the administration's bill agree on at least one point. They want to return Conrail to the private sector. Because I have concluded that Conrail is viable as an independent entity and for all the other reasons I have mentioned, I will support the Morgan Stanley alternative to S. 638.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania. This amendment will require that Conrail be sold by way of a public offering constructed by Morgan Stanley Co. Inc.

When I announced my opposition to the sale to Norfolk Southern, I indicated that I was in favor of a sale of this railroad. Conrail is a healthy, profitable business and it belongs in the private sector. I also stated that I would support a public offering, if offered, as an expression of my support for an alternative to Norfolk Southern.

Mr. President, I have not been a cosponsor of the Morgan Stanley public offering. I believe that there have been some valid critiques of the Morgan Stanley plan. Only recently have they addressed the issue of dividend payout and other issues that were cause for concern. Nevertheless, when compared to the Norfolk Southern merger, the Conrail that would result from a Morgan Stanley plan has distinct advantages.

First, the Morgan Stanley plan means a greater return to the American taxpayer who has assisted rail freight service in the Northeast to the tune of $7 billion. I don't think we do the taxpayer a favor by taking the low bid for Conrail.

Second, Mr. President, the Morgan Stanley plan will not impair rail competition at all. Although New Jersey will remain a monopoly State, with Conrail its only major railroad, at least our competitive position in terms of our ports and movements out of New Jersey will not be worsened.

Finally, Mr. President, we will not see a massive loss of jobs as a result of the Morgan Stanley offer. Those who work at Conrail facilities today will stay on the job.

Mr. President, I surveyed shippers, labor, locally elected officials, and port authorities in my State regarding this sale. Yes, some favored Norfolk Southern. Many favored leaving Conrail just as it is. Some expressed no opinion or would only speak off the record. When all was said and done, I concluded that what many in New Jersey wanted in the face of a merger of Conrail with Norfolk Southern was something else. Many supported a public sale, but no particular public sale. They simply wanted another option.

Mr. President, my support for the Morgan Stanley offer is designed to send a message to the administration that there is a better way to sell Conrail than through a huge, anticompetitive merger. There may be a better way than the Morgan Stanley plan and, if so, I would hope the Secretary of Transportation would bring such a plan to the Senate.

Today, Mr. President, we are asked to choose between only two competing offers. We must evaluate those offers on the basis of the criteria we have each applied to this sale. My criteria was the preservation of jobs in my State, the preservation of competition for my shippers and reasonable rates for the shipment of their goods and a fair return on the vast taxpayer investment made in Conrail. On the basis of those criteria, I conclude that between the Morgan Stanley and Norfolk Southern offers, my choice must be Morgan Stanley.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Vote.

Mr. HARKIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition? The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I find it difficult to follow the eloquent remarks of my colleague from the State of Michigan, but I did want to follow up and perhaps expand on a couple of points he has made and also to point out why this proposal to sell this railroad to Norfolk Southern would be a great detriment to my home State of Iowa. The proposal to sell Conrail to Norfolk Southern is really fundamentally flawed. Again, let us walk through it one more time for the benefit of those who, maybe, have not followed the debate or whose minds are still open on what we ought to do or not to do with this railroad.

What we have basically is a Government that owns a railroad that has $910 million in cash in the bank and has accumulated over $400 million in tax benefits that a purchaser such as Norfolk Southern could use. This is a railroad, Conrail, that made record earnings of $440 million in 1985 and $435 million in 1984.

Last, this railroad, Conrail, has at least $250 million in a pension fund that could be taken over by the purchaser almost immediately.

At the same time, Mr. President, this is a railroad that invested $572 million in capital expenditures and maintenance last year, while earning those record profits.

Now let us take a look at the numbers about which the Senator from Michigan was just talking. I am going to expand on it because not only are we talking the lesser bid, we are actually paying Norfolk Southern to take the railroad.

Take a look at the numbers. The purchaser gets $1.2 billion in cash. That is figured this way: $800 million in the bank, $400 million in tax benefits plus an additional $250 million from the pension fund. We get $1.2 billion.

Get this: The railroad gets $800 million in cash, $400 million in tax benefits, $250 million in pension funds. When you add that all up, after this transaction takes place, they have paid us $1.2 billion and they got $250 million in cash, more than that basically, plus they get 13,000 miles of railroad track and all of the profit that goes with it.

So it is not that we are taking the lowest bid; we are paying Norfolk Southern $250 million to buy it and we are giving them the railroad to boot. Boy, what a deal that is.

In 1973, we had what we now refer to in the history books as the great grain robbery of 1973, when we gave away all of our grain at a lesser price to the Soviet Union. Well, this is the great train robbery of 1986.

I do not think I have seen such a deal. Not even when I was a kid playing Monopoly did I see such a deal as this cooked up. Here is a railroad that we are actually paying to take over.

Really, the question we ought to be asking ourselves is this: What should the Government get in addition to the sums and what we have put into that railroad for the ownership of such a railroad? That is really what we ought to be asking. We have put a lot of money into this railroad. Some people say that the Government cannot run a railroad, the private sector is far better at it. Well, from the Conrail experience, I draw a different picture.

This is a railroad that made $440 million in a year with a mediocre economy. That is not bad. The railroad has shown a profit in every year since 1981. We all know the history. The Government took over seven railroads in bankruptcy. After years of additional losses, they turned the railroad around with the help of a solid management. We put, as I understand it, something like $7 billion into those bankrupt railroads' system. Now Conrail is substantial. It is making a profit. So I would say that the Government's major failure has not been in running the railroad; the Government's major failure has been in the effort to sell it. That is where the Government has failed. Clearly, the private sector is far better at selling major assets than is the Federal Government if we use this is an example.

Mr. SARBANES. Would the Senator yield?

Mr. HARKIN. I would be delighted to yield.

Mr. SARBANES. I think we ought to point out that in addition to this analysis that the Senator made of what is in Conrail now that Norfolk Southern would take over in terms of available cash and so on, it is an enterprise that made $500 million last year. If you presume the same thing happening this year, they are going to get almost half of the purchase price back in the profit of the first year of operating a railroad.

Mr. HARKIN. The Senator is absolutely right.

Mr. SARBANES. On top of all the other things that the Senator was pointing out.

Mr. HARKIN. The Senator is absolutely right and we already know from what is happening in this corridor with this railroad that they are going to make the same kind of profits this year. In one year, they are going to make back in profits what they paid for the railroad. I keep pointing out that not only are they going to get that, they are going to wind up with all of the track and everything else in valuable property that they are going to wind up with that can only appreciate as time goes on.

Again, for the life of me, I cannot understand why there is this rush to sell this railroad to Norfolk Southern.

Again, I get back to what is the essential question we ought to be asking: The Government took over these railroads, sold off some parts, put $7 billion into it, built it up into a profitmaking enterprise. What we should be asking is, in addition to the cash that we have—the $910 million in cash and the $250 million from the pension fund—in addition to that, what should the Government get for this railroad? But no one is asking that question.

We ought to throw this out for open bids, let people come in and bid on this railroad. But again, that is the fundamental flaw in this. It was the Department of Transportation that came up with the figure of $1.2 billion. Of course, if they say that is what it is worth, that is what the private sector is going to come in with. I do not blame the private sector for coming in and offering $1.2 billion for it if that is what the Department of Transportation says it is worth.

Rather than what it is worth, we ought to say, here is what we put into it, here is the cash on hand, here is the property and now, if anybody is interested in it, we are going to take sealed bids on it and see what the highest bid is. Again, I cannot see why we should be paying any attention at all, let alone being out here on the floor voting on the Norfolk Southern offer.

Basically what we are doing is paying them. We are paying the Norfolk Southern to take over this railroad, and it is really an outrage. But what do we get for it? What does the Government get for paying Norfolk Southern to take the railroad? Well, we get a nice slogan, privatization. But I do not know if that one word, good as it is, is worth that kind of money.

Well, there are other offers. The Morgan Stanley Group is clearly the leading alternative. Not being another railroad, they do not gain the accelerated use of the tax benefits. They have also raised, as people have said, their up-front payment to $1.4 million. Well, this clearly is the way we ought to go—the highest bid and not the lowest bid.

Now, I have some other problems not only with this sale but with the way that we have been led to believe what is involved.

A couple weeks ago I came into the Chamber and found on my desk a nice, fancy, black notebook and in that notebook were all the reasons why we should sell Conrail to Norfolk Southern. I looked at the index tabs on my notebook, and I found the one that said State of Iowa. I was interested to find out what the impact was on the State of Iowa with regard to the sale, so I opened the tab to the State of Iowa. I looked at it, I read it over, not really fully cognizant of what the position of the State of Iowa was. I will read from this notebook "The Norfolk Southern acquisition will actually have little, if any, impact on Iowa. The Antitrust Division identified no competitive issues in the State of Iowa," et cetera, et cetera. Well, I telecopied this out to the Iowa Department of Transportation. I said, "I found this on my desk. I guess it came through the Commerce Committee. This is what we are told is the impact on Iowa. Would you care to comment?"

Well, I have received back a response to this. They said, "We don't know how anybody could in good faith say that this is Iowa's impact," what was in the black notebook that was put on my desk a couple of weeks ago. Quite frankly, according to the Iowa Department of Transportation, the acquisition of Conrail by Norfolk Southern will have a devastating effect on the State of Iowa. I remind Senators who are present that the State of Iowa is already suffering as it is because of the farm bankruptcies and the foreclosures and the lack of a farm income and now we are having another blow dealt to the State of Iowa. But I was concerned that I had this notebook which said it would have little, if any, impact on Iowa. I just wonder how many other Senators had a notebook on their desk with their State heading saying that really the takeover by Norfolk Southern would have little, if any, impact upon that Senator's home State.

Let me read from the letter that I received on January 28 from the Iowa Department of Transportation in which they said:

> The acquisition of Conrail by Norfolk Southern will have major negative effects upon Iowa through its anticompetitive results on the railroads serving the State and the upper Midwest.

And then they went on to say, regarding the point that the Antitrust Division discovered no competitive issues in the State of Iowa, that the U.S. Department of Justice had not ruled formally on this matter, that they only ruled on the anticompetitive aspects in the Conrail area but not outside of the Conrail area such as the State of Iowa.

That has not been done, and I understand that the Senator from Illinois is going to have an amendment later on to address it. Regardless of the outcome of this vote, I certainly hope that the Senator from Illinois' amendment would be adopted to address those anticompetitive concerns that we have in the Midwest. But I wanted to point out that the concerns of the Iowa Department of Transportation are not red herrings, as was stated in this black notebook, but in fact real concerns, a concern that on an annualized basis we would lose from the Chicago Northwestern, which is our main service to Chicago and points East, 45,050 carloads and 75,790 trailers, resulting in a gross freight revenue loss of $54.6 million annually to the State of Iowa.

Mr. CHAFEE. I wonder if the Senator will yield for a question.

Mr. HARKIN. I am delighted to yield for a question.

Mr. CHAFEE. The question is can we proceed to a vote fairly soon? What is the Senator's intention?

Mr. HARKIN. I think that I have probably about 10 more minutes and that would be about it. I am making a point on what the impact is going to be on my State of Iowa, and it is going to have a devastating impact on the State of Iowa.

Mr. DANFORTH. Will the Senator yield just for 30 seconds so I can respond to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. HARKIN. Yes.

Mr. DANFORTH. The debate on this amendment has gone on now since 7 minutes after 3. Nothing has been said in opposition to the amendment. I intend to speak for perhaps 10 minutes, and then it would be my hope to make a motion to table. I really think this has been debated enough and people are anxious to leave. Senator HOLLINGS has stated that he would be willing to speak on it. I may be able to do a persuasive enough job in 10 minutes to cover all the bases. If not, he might want to speak. I would hope that if the Senator from Iowa could wrap it up in about 10 minutes and I could speak for about 10 minutes and move to table, we could be voting on this by a quarter after 7.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. HARKIN. I yield.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I wonder if we might be able to agree, if the Senator from Iowa has 10 more minutes and the Senator from Missouri has 10 minutes, we could agree to vote on a motion to table, whatever, at 20 after 7.

Mr. HARKIN. I do not have any objection. I do want to finish my statement. I estimate 10 minutes. I do not think it will take any longer than that. I do not want to cut off other people who want to speak.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I do not think we have any objection over here so long as the distinguished Senator from Iowa can finish his statement within that time.

Mr. DOLE. Is there any objection to that request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Does this give the Senator from Iowa the time he wants?

Mr. DOLE. Yes.

Mr. HARKIN. I understand I cannot be stopped, I can go ahead and keep speaking. I hope to finish in 10 minutes. I believe in good faith I will be.

Mr. DANFORTH. I am going to have to object if I cannot get 10 minutes out of more than 4 hours of debate to oppose the amendment. I am sorry, Mr. Leader, I could not agree to it. My intention would be as soon as Senator HARKIN has finished his remarks to get the floor to speak for I hope 10 minutes. I do not think it will be any longer, maybe shorter, then move to table.

Mr. DOLE. The Senator from Iowa would probably conclude by 10 after 7, correct?

Mr. HARKIN. Yes.

Mr. DOLE. That would be fine. And then 10 minutes. Divide it that way.

Mr. DANFORTH. If we can divide it equally, that is fine with me.

Mr. DOLE. Fine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, this is not a red herring for the State of Iowa. This is a real concern that we are going to lose, in the Chicago-Northwestern run, about $55 million a year. With the Illinos and Central Gulf, trackage, we are going to lose an additional $35 million a year, and we do not know about some of the other smaller railroads. So this is not a red herring for the State of Iowa. We will have a devastating loss of service to the State if this railroad is sold to Norfolk Southern.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this letter from the Iowa Department of Transportation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IOWA DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION,
January 28, 1986.

We have reviewed the U.S. DOT Critique of Iowa's position on Conrail. We are providing you with our response for your information because of the inaccurate and misleading statements contained in the critique which should be brought to your attention.

LES HOLLAND.

REVIEW OF U.S. DOT CRITIQUE OF IOWA POSITION ON CONRAIL

Comments provided by U.S. DOT regarding Iowa's concerns with Norfolk Southern's (NS) purchase of Conrail (CR) are inaccurate, and misleading.

1. Adverse effect on Iowa:

Acquisition of CR by NS will have major negative effect upon Iowa through its anticompetitive results on the railroads serving the state and the upper Midwest. This will occur through diversion of traffic and loss of revenues to Iowa carriers. Iowa shippers will also be deprived of competitive choices of services and freight charges. Service to be provided by the Guilford Transportation Company (GTI) will not restore to Iowa railroads and shippers the choices currently open to them. It should be noted that the U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) has not ruled formally on this matter.

2. Antitrust analysis of anticompetitive effects:

The DOJ restricted their analysis of anticompetitive effects of the NS proposal to the merged CR service area. They did not identify competitive issues in the state of Iowa.

3. The U.S. DOT identified as "red herrings" our concerns with the traffic diversions:

The diversion is not frivolous. The carloads and dollar figures reflect actual traffic moving between Iowa and Chicago originating both on and off line during 1985.

CNW's independent outside consultant using DOJ methodology, identified an annual loss (based on 1985 traffic levels) of 45,050 carloads, and 75,790 trailers together resulting in a $54.6 million deficit in gross revenue.

ICG would lose $35 million annually.

Iowa disagrees with NS's negative description regarding its physical route between Kansas City to Chicago or to other NS territory east of the Mississippi River. This NS main line is fully signalized (centralized traffic control) and meets the FRA safety standard for operation at 60 mph. Over 75% of the track consists of 132# continuous welded rail. The remaining portions average 115# rail.

4. Iowa Interstate and Soo Position:

Agreements between NS and the Iowa Interstate and Soo were not obtained because of support for the merger. The agreements were defensive in nature because both of these carriers are uniquely susceptible to adversarial actions by NS at the present time. The agreements do not guarantee long term immunity.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I did want to make two other points.

The first is that the Government can probably sell the railroad on the open market through the usual channels and keep the profits itself. I believe that would be the preferable route. But obviously that is not going to happen. It is going to be done in a different way; and if it is going to be done in a different way, then a profit should be made, and that profit rightfully belongs to the Government.

As I have said, we have invested $7 billion to make Conrail profitable. Unfortunately, this option of trying to sell it ourselves is not going to happen. Since we are faced with two choices, the choice basically of selling it to Norfolk Southern or selling it to Morgan Stanley, Morgan Stanley is the best way to go. It is the best way to go because they offer more money. Second, they will provide for a competitive type of railroad that will not work a hardship on the Midwest and, more specifically, my State of Iowa.

I understand that one-half of the attorneys general in our country have considerable reservations about the creation of a Conrail-Norfolk Southern combination. The attorney general of the State of Iowa has voiced major concerns about this merger. As I said, the Iowa Department of Transportation believes it is anticompetitive.

I think the interesting point is that the U.S. Department of Justice has refused to give this arrangement a formal clean bill of health on antitrust grounds, the issue about which the Senator from Michigan spoke.

Unfortunately, under the bill, this transaction is exempt from existing antitrust laws. At a minimum, that needs to be changed. But I think it says something, when we have a bill before us which has attached to the end of it a clause that exempts it from the antitrust laws. That ought to throw up red flags all over the place; because what we are talking about is not selling this railroad, but giving this railroad—no, even more than giving the railroad, we are not only giving the railroad to Norfolk Southern, but also, we are actually paying them to take if off our hands, when in fact the taxpayers could be making money from it.

Mr. President, numerous editorials have been written about this deal, raising very serious concerns. Yesterday, the Des Moines Register had an editorial entitled "Showdown on Conrail." I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SHOWDOWN ON CONRAIL

Among the first bills the Reagan administration is trying to push through Congress this year is one authorizing sale of the government-owned Conrail to the Norfolk Southern railroad. The president made a pitch for it on the opening day of the session at the request of Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole.

She engineered the negotiated sale for $1.2 billion. Despite a later, better offer

($1.4 billion) that would keep Conrail intact, she has invested too much prestige in the deal to back away from it. The bill has been tied up in the Senate since last summer, and even though Dole's husband is majority leader, the 60 votes needed to shut off debate are still lacking.

If those 60 votes can be rounded up, the bill will pass the Senate. Its prospects in the House are less bright—fortunately, because it would be a bad deal. Its anti-competitive aspects are serious.

Norfolk Southern is the only real competition for Conrail in numerous important markets in the eastern part of the Midwest. NS proposes to sell track or give trackage rights to two small, flimsy rail systems, Guilford Transportation Industries and the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad, to maintain what NS and Secretary Dole call competition.

NS relies heavily on its argument that Conrail—which is earning about $400 million a year while competing with NS—is too frail to survive a recession and needs the "deep pockets" of NS. If Conrail couldn't make it alone, how could little, money-losing Guilford and P&LE compete with a merged NS/Conrail?

They couldn't, and the anti-trust division of the Justice Department rejected the first two NS plans for setting up this so-called competition. A third proposal is under consideration, but Congress could go ahead without approval, and the legislation forbids court review.

Iowa would be better served by an independent Conrail, because Iowa's major railroad, the North Western, depends heavily on hauling freight between Conrail in Chicago and the Union Pacific in Fremont, Neb.

After a merger, much of this freight would move on NS/Conrail to Kansas City, bypassing the North Western and costing it as much as $40 million a year that would have to be made up by higher rates or less service.

By voting "no" on the sale to Norfolk Southern, Iowa's congressional delegation will be acting in the best interest not only of the Conrail region but of Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, the editorial raises a serious question about why we are continuing on this road to sell Norfolk Southern. It says that some bureaucratic decision was made some time ago and, to coin a phrase, the train got rolling down the tracks, and now no one is going to stop it. Is that what we have become? Have we become enslaved to a bureaucratic decision that somehow this sale has to go through, and only to Norfolk Southern? I think the people of the United States, the taxpayers, want more from the U.S. Senate than just a rubberstamp of some decision that was made in antiquity which no longer is even deserving of our consideration. I think the people of this country deserve more than a Senate that would just roll over and give this railroad away and actually pay Norfolk Southern to take it off our hands.

Mr. President, in conclusion, all I can say is that the Norfolk Southern proposal is fundamentally flawed. The amendment now before us, the offer by Morgan Stanley, is much the preferable offer. We would actually make money on the deal. We actually have a competitive railroad that will compete and give our customers the best choice of how to ship in this country, not an anticompetitive, monopolistic railroad that can charge whatever the traffic will bear.

So, if the vote is on a motion to table, I ask Senators to vote not to table and to vote for the Morgan Stanley proposal, to give the taxpayers of this country the best deal possible.

Mr. President, there is something very fishy about this whole deal when you look at it, on the face of it, as to why we are being asked to rush to judgment, to pay Norfolk Southern $250 million to take the railroad, to give them the railroad as a side deal. There is something here that smacks, as I said earlier, of "the great grain robbery of 1973."

I think that when the history books are written, if this deal should go through, that Norfolk Southern does get this railroad—or, even if it does not, if the Senate votes against the Morgan Stanley proposal and subsequently votes for Norfolk Southern—it will go down in the history books, I think, as the low point in this administration's conduct of our domestic economy during its 8 years, because it will point out, I think, the fallacy in this administration, that they have been saying all along they are for free enterprise, that they are for competition, therefore cutting the deficit. Yet, this deal runs counter to that. This very deal, to sell it to Norfolk Southern, is anticompetitive, it is antifree enterprise, and it increases the deficit rather than decreasing it.

So I think the history books will point back to this vote and say that the Senate, rather than following the best judgment of selling this to the highest bidder, in fact gave away a railroad—gave away a railroad that became the biggest monopolistic transportation system in this country, one which, only because of an additional clause that exempted it from the anticompetitive clause we have on the books, was able to squeeze out competition and become, perhaps in the future, the only railroad in the United States.

This, I predict, could be the first step on the road toward making Norfolk Southern perhaps the only major railroad east of the Mississippi. When that happens, we certainly will not have any competition.

Mr. President, I urge a "yes" vote on the Morgan Stanley proposal, the best deal for our taxpayers.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, after more than 4 hours of argument in favor of the Morgan Stanley amendment, I rise for 10 minutes to state the case against it.

First, I say that the Government of the United States cannot do business this way. In 1981, we passed the NERSA bill, the Northeast Rail Services Act, and we decided at that time that we are going to sell the railroad.

Between 1982 and 1984, the Secretary of Transportation solicited bids, hired a consultant. A hundred different possible bidders were contacted—more than 100. In April 1984, the Secretary of Transportation set a 60-day deadline for submitting bids on Conrail.

On June 19, 1984, the Secretary received 15 bids for Conrail—15 including Norfolk Southern's. June 19, 1984, was the deadline set by the Secretary of Transportation.

In February 1985, after very careful analysis, the Secretary of Transportation picked from the 15 bids the Norfolk Southern bid. Then in May 1985, 3 months after the Secretary picked the winning bid, enters Morgan Stanley with another bid.

We have heard it said on the floor that there is something fishy about it. I am going to tell you what would be fishy. Get a bidding practice under way, set the deadline, have the deadline pass, have people negotiate with Uncle Sam in good faith and then, at the end of the whole thing, 3 months after the best bid is picked, come in and say Morgan Stanley is the winner.

You talk about sweethearts and favoritism and smell bad. That smelled bad to me. I do not think we want that kind of Government.

Mr. President, the real question, though, before the Senate now is very simple and it is the health of rail transportation in the Northeast quadrant of this country. That is the issue. You know it is kind of funny hearing everyone stand up and say oh, the question is the budget, $200 million difference, lost tax benefits, and whatnot. The big issue is not any $200 million, Mr. President. The big issue is what to do about the health of the railroads in the Northeast quadrant of this country. That is the only issue in my mind.

What good does it do to get rid of Conrail and have it come back in a year or two? The question is, Is Conrail to be affiliated with Norfolk Southern, one of the largest railroads in this country, one of the few that pays taxes, or is it going to be put there as a stand-alone railroad, and that is the Morgan Stanley deal? What the Morgan Stanley deal is it is an underwriting, an underwriting. Morgan Stanley is an underwriter. Morgan Stanley has put together an investor group and the Morgan Stanley deal is that the investor group buys Conrail from the Government and then resells it to who knows whom? Anybody they want. Carl Icahn.

We have heard arguments today about the fact that the assets are valued higher than the purchase price. That is probably true, because the going concern is what they are buying, not a bunch of assets. But because that is true, this is an invitation to corporate raiders if we put it out there to Morgan Stanley.

Here is what Morgan Stanley proposes to do: Morgan Stanley proposes to bleed Conrail of cash. It proposes to pay out $230 million of Conrail cash to settle labor concessions. It proposes to pay out Conrail cash to buy up 15 percent of the stock from the ESOP Program and it proposes to pay out $118 million per year in dividends to its stockholders, and then it proposes to sell it.

Here is what Tom Saunders of Morgan Stanley said when he testified before the Senate Commerce Committee. He said: "When we do the first sale to the public, we will leave town."

That is what we are getting if we give it to Morgan Stanley. They will leave town. They have no remaining responsibility for the future of this railroad. They leave town.

Will it survive as a stand-alone railroad?

Mr. President, do not listen to Jack Danforth. Do not listen to any Member of the Senate. We are not railroad experts.

Let us hear a real railroad expert about the future of a stand-alone Conrail, abandoned by this underwriting group.

Mr. Hays Watkins, chairman of CSX, in November 1984, said as follows:

> Financial integrity contributes to the long-term preservation of a central rail service, cushions the corporation against cyclical downturns which typify the rail industry, reduces the risk of a return to the Government and permits the establishment of a normalized labor-management structure based on consensus rather than panic. Thus, financial integrity can best be assured by assimilating Conrail into the railroad industry. The sale of Conrail to a nonrailroad entity fails to shore up Conrail's inherent vulnerability.

This is the great competitor, CSX, speaking.

Mr. President, a stand-alone Conrail is doomed. It cannot survive. It will go under and we will end up owning a railroad yet again.

Someone argued earlier today: Will the shippers put up with a sale to Morgan Stanley if they thought it was doomed? Sure, because good, old Uncle Sucker would end up holding the bag again. I think the U.S. Government should get out of this business.

I think that the best way to get us out is to sell Conrail to a sound railroad and not to put it out there to stand-alone.

I will just add one more thing, Mr. President. If we are going to sell Conrail to the general public, a stand-alone Conrail, why have middleman profits? Why set up these middlemen? How are you going to answer that to your constituents? When Conrail goes under after a year or two of standing alone, how would Senators answer to their constituents why fat middlemen profits were given to Morgan Stanley and some underwriting group? If you are going to sell the railroad, sell it yourself.

Mr. President, that completes my comments, and I yield back the remainder of my time.

However, I wish to ask the Democratic leader if he is prepared to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement with respect to the time of the cloture vote.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I think I am.

Would the distinguished Senator state the time for the cloture vote that would be in the request?

Mr. DANFORTH. The cloture vote would be at 3 o'clock.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, at what time will the distinguished majority leader bring the Senate in tomorrow?

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I am instructed that the majority leader would convene the Senate at 9:30 a.m.

Mr. BYRD. One final question, Mr. President. What if the agreement is to the effect that the Senate begins the vote on cloture at 3 o'clock? This would mean then, would it, that Senators could get their second-degree amendments in if they were filed by no later than 2 o'clock?

Mr. DANFORTH. That is my understanding, that second-degree amendments must be filed at the desk by 2 p.m. tomorrow to qualify under rule XX.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have no objection.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no unanimous-consent request before the Senate at this point.

Mr. BYRD. May I say this for the record? If the Senator from West Virginia does not agree, the majority leader has it within his authority to bring the Senate in at such time as will force the vote at 3 o'clock. So, I think it is the better part of valor on my part to agree in this instance.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I do not object at this time, may I ask the distinguished majority manager of the bill if he will answer a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is informed there is no unanimous-consent request before the Senate.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate that the cloture vote occur at 3 p.m. tomorrow and the mandatory quorum under rule XXII be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I do not expect to object, may I say to the distinguished manager of the bill and to the majority leader as well as the minority leader I have no problem with 3 o'clock. There have been ongoing discussions for several days. The manager of the bill knows I have amendment 1567 at the desk. I expect to lay it down immediately succeeding the Morgan Stanley rollcall. That is the antitrust amendment. I am perfectly agreeable to debate in the morning from, say, 10 to 11, and have a rollcall at 11 a.m. on my amendment.

Is there any problem about that? That is my intention.

Mr. DANFORTH. There is no problem at all, as far as I am concerned, with the Senator from Illinois laying down his amendment tonight, and he and I have agreed with each other to have a 1-hour time agreement. That would be perfectly agreeable to me. Whether it would be agreeable to other Members of the Senate is unknown to me.

Mr. DIXON. I have no objection.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, if there is no objection, I wonder if we might agree that there would be an hour time agreement on the amendment by the Senator from Illinois, Mr. DIXON.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am advised we cannot agree because of a Senator who has so informed us by telephone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Missouri. Is there objection? Without objection, the unanimous-consent request is agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, is a motion to table now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A motion to table is now in order.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I move to table the Specter amendment.

Mr. SPECTER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Missouri (Mr. DANFORTH) to table the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SPECTER). The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. GOLDWATER], the Senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM], and the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS], are necessarily absent.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. CHILES], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. HART] the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS], are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS] would vote "yea," and I further announce that if present and voting the Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS] would vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 39, as follows:

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

S. 2025. A bill to amend Chapter IX of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act to require the appointment of the Commissioner of Food and Drugs to be subject to Senate confirmation to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

SENATE CONFIRMATION OF ADMINISTRATOR OF FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to require Senate confirmation of the Commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration.

SCOPE OF RESPONSIBILITY

I can think of few officials at the Department of Health and Human Services with the broad scope of responsibility of the Commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration. By contrast, Senate confirmation is required for 17 officials at the Department—including the Commissioner for Children, Families, and Youth; the Commissioner of Aging; and the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration [ADAMHA]—but few of these officials have a fraction of the FDA Commissioner's responsibilities.

Just consider the scope of FDA's jurisdiction:

The composition, quality, safety, and labeling of food, food additives, colors, and cosmetics;

Inspection of food and cosmetic producers' facilities, surveillance of advertising of prescription drugs, and researching consumer complaints;

Drug approval, ranging from premarket approval and insuring good manufacturing processes to monitoring the quality and labeling of marketed drugs;

Setting standards for radiation-emitting devices; and,

Responsibility for implementation of the Medical Devices Act.

It is hard to find any official at the Department of Health and Human Services, with the exception of the Secretary and the Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration, whose decisions can affect so many Americans and whose decisions are so crucial to the protection of public health.

POLITICIZING THE FDA

With such sweeping responsibilities, the Commissioner of the FDA is often at the center of important decisions, attempting to reconcile public health considerations and economic considerations.

Unfortunately, there has been increasing political pressure to place economic consideration above considerations of public health and the three Commissioners to serve during the Reagan administration have been kept on increasingly short leashes. The result has been a triumph of politics over science and has led to criticism from both sides of the aisle on a number of issues:

Despite repeated recommendations by FDA scientists that a number of color additives caused cancer, the administration refused to even consider taking them off the market as the law required. They even took away the FDA Commissioner's authority to ban cancer-causing color additives, which past administrations had delegated to the Commissioner;

Despite a clear link between aspirin and Reye's syndrome, a potentially fatal disease, political pressure by the administration to accommodate industry resulted in the ill-fated decision to rely upon a voluntary warning label. Public outcry finally promoted the administration to reverse its position to assure protection for our Nation's children;

And while the FDA has finally taken action on sulfites, it took more than 21 deaths and more than 800 injuries caused by allergic reactions to sulfites before they were prodded to action. And then only in the face of possible legislative action.

And the list goes on and on. The administration still opposes complete labeling of all ingredients used in drugs, despite the strong support for such truth in labeling by the American Academy of Pediatrics and the American Medical Association.

The track record of the last 5 years makes it clear that the FDS Commissioner can no longer be just another hired hand of the administration. We don't need another team player. We need a tough, independent FDA Commissioner who can resist powerful political and economic interests.

Senate confirmation will help restore accountability and ensure that future FDA Commissioners understand that their first loyalty must be to the public trust they hold.

Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be reprinted in the RECORD as well as an article from the Chicago Tribune, entitled "FDA 'Politicization' Called Hazardous to Health."

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2025

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) chapter IX of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act is amended by adding at the end the following:

"APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

"SEC. 903. The Food and Drug Administration shall be headed by a Commissioner of Food and Drugs who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to individuals appointed to the office of Commissioner of Food and Drugs after the date of the enactment of this Act.

FDA POLITICIZATION CALLED HAZARDOUS TO HEALTH

(By Michael L. Millenson)

WASHINGTON.—Not long after becoming commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration, Dr. Frank Young gave enlarged replicas of his FDA inspector's badge to his boss, the secretary of health and human services (HHS), and her chief of staff.

To Young, the gifts were "thank-yous" for the help that Secretary Margaret Heckler and the chief of staff, C. McClain Haddow, were giving him in running an agency whose responsibilities range from food, drugs and cosmetics to artificial hearts and computerized brain scanners.

To critics, however, the gifts symbolized what they see as the erosion of the FDA's traditional independence under the Reagan administration and the growing influence of politics on scientific decisions.

In particular, critics charge that intervention by HHS and the Federal Office of Management and Budget [OMB] has endangered public health in activities ranging from eating a salad at a restaurant and giving aspirin to a sick child to applying makeup:

Critics say it took congressional hearings spotlighting the death of a 10-year-old girl from an alleged allergic reaction to sulfites before the FDA proposed a limited ban on the preservative, often used to improve the appearance of fruit and vegetables in restaurants.

When studies showed that children taking aspirin for flu could develop a potentially fatal disease called Reye's syndrome, pressure built for mandatory warnings on aspirin bottles. Aspirin makers disputed the studies, and the FDA decided to allow voluntary labeling, which critics now charge manufacturers are ignoring.

Although FDA scientists concluded that several dyes and colorings often used in cosmetics were weak carcinogens, HHS and OMB refused to allow the agency to ban their use, a congressional committee found.

In an unusual gesture, Dr. Alexander Schmidt, the FDA commissioner under President Richard Nixon, told state regulators recently, "We have more politicization of the agency than is either warranted by rational politics or good for the American people."

One particular target of critics' ire has been Haddow, a former aide to Sen. Orrin Hatch [R., Utah]. But Haddow, along with Young, vigorously denies that public health has been threatened in any way.

"We believe without question that science has to be left to the people at FDA," says Haddow. "But we think there's a role to play in the application of public policy to that science.

"Policy decisions that affect virtually every American deserve to have another level of review. . . . We think the American people have clearly said which philosophy should prevail [in that review]."

Adds Hatch: "It's the 'outs' complaining about the 'ins.' It's sour grapes."

To help assure a change in philosophy, a longstanding order giving the FDA commissioner semiautonomous authority was revoked soon after the Reagan administration took office in early 1981. Meanwhile, OMB, which is part of the executive office of the president, stepped up its oversight of the FDA under an executive order requiring an economic "cost-benefit" review of government regulations.

The new attention from HHS and OMB was evident when the FDA moved to ban six colorings and dyes found to cause cancer in animals. Although the additives seemed, at worst, to be weak carcinogens, the FDA concluded that the Delaney Clause, a federal law that forbids any use of a carcinogenic food additive, left them no choice.

Nevertheless, a proposed ban was rejected repeatedly by HHS, a report by the House Committee on Government Operations concluded. Meanwhile, an industry trade group attorney with ties to Vice President George Bush intervened with OMB. The FDA then was told that the administration opposed banning the additives, because they were unlikely to cause health problems.

"The administrative record contains no justification from department officials for not approving FDA's recommendations," the House committee said in a unanimous report. "It is likely that OMB played a major, if not pivotal role, in the continued, unlawful marketing of these dyes."

Complains Rep. Ted Weiss [D., N.Y.], chairman of a government operations subcommittee: "It's not up to the regulatory agency to say they don't like the law and, therefore, they're not going to adhere to it."

Both Republican and Democratic representatives, meanwhile, have asked hard questions about the FDA's slowness to ban the use of sulfite as a food preservative.

Since early 1983 the FDA has received reports of 21 deaths and more than 800 injuries allegedly caused by allergic reactions to sulfites. In August the agency finally proposed regulations that eventually will ban the preservative in fresh foods and vegetables.

Young insists that the FDA acted as quickly as scientific evidence would allow. "Sulfites was one of the fastest regulations even to go through FDA and the department," he says.

Critics, however, contend the agency did not move until congressional hearings focused publicity on the death of 10-year-old Medaya McPike of Salem, Ore., who died earlier this year, allegedly from an allergic reaction to sulfites

"It is sad, but true, that you need dead bodies and the glare of adverse publicity to overcome this administration's aversion to public health regulation," says Rep. John Dingell [D., Mich.], chairman of the sulfite hearings.

Adds an FDA insider who asked not to be identified: "Most of the [lag] time was spent trying to convince [HHS] that we had to have regulation, that people were dying."

The FDA's decision to use a voluntary approach with aspirin manufacturers regarding warning labels on bottles has provoked charges from critics that the action is not working.

In a recent letter to several senators, the American Academy of Pediatrics complained that the aspirin makers have reneged on their promise to post a clear warning about Reye's syndrome on their bottles in time for this winter's flu season. [The Aspirin Foundation of America disputes the charge.]

By Mr. ROTH (for himself, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. DANFORTH, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. BOREN, Mr. DURENBERGER, Mr. COHEN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. GORE, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. DODD, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. DIXON, Mr. SIMON, and Mr. BIDEN):

S. 2026. A bill to extend the trade adjustment assistance program; to the Committee on Finance.

TRADE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE EXTENSION

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise to introduce with Senator MOYNIHAN and 10 other members of the Senate Finance Committee, a bill to provide for temporary and retroactive extension of the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program.

Congress must act now to stop the dismantling of the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program. The failure of the Congress to include a temporary extension of the authorization of this program in the final version of H.R. 4006, the extension bill which passed on December 20, has provided the administration a convenient rationale for eliminating trade adjustment assistance. Though we may disagree with the administration's legal interpretation of this legislative situation, one thing is clear—the passage now of a temporary and retroactive extension bill will prevent the further dismantling of the TAA Program. It will give us time to complete the legislation process on the full extension and reform of the program that was twice-passed by this body as part of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985.

How can we expect to maintain responsible trade policies, if we abandon those who lose their jobs to imports? A trade policy that calls for growing trade among nations simply will not succeed unless it is accompanied by policies to help workers adjust to foreign competition. The strong interest in the Congress in strengthening trade adjustment assistance repeatedly demonstrated in votes prior to the December recess, even in the face of Gramm-Rudman, shows that we in the trenches of the trade debate understand this basic point. Instead of fighting this constructive effort by the Congress, it is time for administration to recognize the clear link between an effective Trade Adjustment Assistance Program and the chances for success of its broader trade objectives.

The decision to abruptly stop payments of cash benefits to workers already participating in the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program has caused great hardship. Let me make the situation clear—these people had already been told that they would receive up to 52 weeks of cash benefits and many of them are enrolled in training programs. One week before Christmas their cash benefits stopped with absolutely no prior warning.

I have received many letters from people affected by this decision. I ask unanimous consent to include some of these in the RECORD along with a reprint of a article from a Danville, IL newspaper, and the text of the bill.

These letters detail the gravity of this situation.

Let's move now to assure that the administration keeps its commitment to workers already under the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program. The retroactive provision in this legislation will restore cash benefits back to December 20. Then let's move ahead expeditiously on the longer term extension and reform of the program in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act.

The avalanche of imports continues. This is no time to abandon those who lose their jobs to imports.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2026

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 285 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. note preceding section 2271) is amended by striking out "December 19, 1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "March 15, 1986".

(b) Chapters 2 and 3 of title II of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2271 et seq.) shall be applied as if the amendment made by subsection (a) had taken effect on December 18, 1985.

WORKERS' RETRAINING FUNDS AXED

(By Tom Nelson)

The federal government pulled the rug from under us, say Gary Hubbard, Bill Swearingen and Ron Fuller, all laid-off Hyster Company workers.

"We held up our part of the bargain. We were made promises. Why isn't our government holding up its part of the bargain?" Fuller said.

The three took up the federal government's offer to pay for job retraining after their jobs of about 12 years fell victim to foreign competition. Under the Trade Readjustment Act, the government agreed to pay tuition plus provide additional 52 weeks of weekly income during their retraining.

But Dec. 21, the weekly income—a maximum of $209 for a person with a dependent—ended, several months before the three thought it would.

Swearingen, of 47 E. Liberty, Hubbard of Tilton, Ill., and Fuller of 21 Park, all in their 30s, are among about 75 persons in the Danville area enrolled in TRA retraining programs who lost their weekly government check. For workers in their 30s through 50s, some with families and mortgages, the unanticipated loss hit hard.

Several hundred other workers who lost jobs to foreign trade but who aren't in training programs also lost TRA weekly income.

Swearingen, Fuller and Hubbard said they are frustrated and confused because they see themselves working to become productive and taxpaying workers again, but have been cut off.

"Social Security (recipients) got an increase, Public Aid (welfare recipients) got an increase, but ours gets cut off. Instead of being productive, we'll be on Public Aid," Fuller said.

"We'll all be able to get jobs after our training. All we want is a chance," Hubbard said.

The three were laid off in February 1985 after about 12 years at the lift truck maker, which has lost sales to lower-priced Japanese models. When the U.S. Department of Labor certified Hyster employees eligible for Trade Readjustment Act retraining, all three jumped at the chance. They enrolled in two-year programs. Don Haberkorn, coordinator of admissions and record at Danville Area Community College, said "these (retraining program people) are workers. They're used to getting up in the morning. They'll be employable."

Hubbard enrolled in computer programming, Swearingen in electronics and Fuller in heating, air conditioning and refrigeration. They've all completed one semester of schooling and need four.

As TRA was then set up last fall, the federal government paid for retraining—tuition and books. For students, TRA provided 52 weeks of weekly benefits after the 26 weeks of regular unemployment benefits. TRA-certified workers who didn't enroll in school got only 26 weeks of weekly income following the regular 26 weeks of benefits following layoff.

Only about 10 percent of the workers eligible for TRA enrolled in training. Some didn't enroll because they wouldn't have any income in the second year of training, just the first.

All three had been laid off about 3½ years in the early 1980s. That left them without savings and more dependent on the government, they said. The loss of government income was critical, they said.

Fuller's program is at DeVry Institute in Terre Haute, Ind. "I have a 140-mile round trip. I can't afford to continue my education without the weekly benefit," Fuller said.

Fuller has three children (two of whom live with him and his wife.) His wife, a waitress, makes $2 an hour plus tips and the rent is $300 a month, including utilities.

Hubbard said he can finish the spring semester without the income, but the next year isn't clear. His wife works and they have a child and a mortgage. "With her check I can scrape by," he said.

Swearingen, who is single and has no mortgage, said he'll get by "but I don't know for how long."

Student loans are a possibility, but those are less practical for adults with family obligations and debts, they said. Hubbard is worried his grades will suffer if he spends more of his time at a part-time job (if one is available).

"We'll have to have the grades to get hired. Why else would somebody want to hire somebody our ages?" Hubbard said.

The Job Training Partnership programs, which also provides job training, doesn't specifically train workers who lose their jobs to foreign trade. JTP goes to senior workers, workers who fall below low-income levels and workers whose plants close.

TRA got the squeeze amid efforts to reduce $200 billion a year federal deficits. Congress is expected to take up the assistance for victims of foreign trade when it convenes later this month. But it is not clear whether weekly income will continue for some or for all.

The Danville Area Community Services Council, a social service agency backed by organized labor, asks that any person affected by the change in TRA benefits call it at 443-4047.

VICTIMS OF IMPORT COMPETITION LOSE JOBLESS AID

(By Tom Baden)

Concluding that Congress failed to renew funding for a special unemployment benefits program, the Labor Department has cut off cash payments to workers in Central New York and across the country who lost their jobs because of import competition.

That move has drawn howls of protest from some congressmen, who said renewal of the trade adjustment assistance program was indeed included in last-minute legislation passed in late December.

"This is an absolutely intolerable situation," said Rep. Sherwood Boehlert, R-Utica. "A federal agency, for some unknown reason, is clearly violating the intent of Congress."

Among companies whose laid-off workers have been receiving the payments are General Electric Co. in Syracuse, Pico Products in Liverpool, SCM Corp.'s Smith-Corona division in Cortland and Syracuse, and Chicago Pneumatic in Utica.

About 1,000 workers in New York State received trade adjustment assistance payments in November, with the average payment about $360 a month, according to Roger Gerby of the state Labor Department in Albany.

At its height, when industrial plant shutdowns beset the state in the late 1970s, the program provided benefits for about 35,000 idled New York workers, Gerby said.

In Central New York, hundreds of recently unemployed workers have been receiving, or hope to soon qualify, for the benefits.

Art Smith, president of General Electric's union, said the payments have already stopped for about 200 workers, and another 800 who would have been eligible for the plan are awaiting word of the program's fate.

Officials of the state unemployment division are advising workers to continue reporting to their local unemployment offices as the normally would, Smith said, just in case payments are renewed retroactively.

Oneida Ltd. was told this week that some of its ex-employees qualify for the trade adjustment assistance program, a spokesman for Rep. George Wortley, R-Fayetteville, said Friday.

Carrier Corp., which has laid off hundreds of employees in recent months, and Allied Corp., which will soon fire about 1,400 workers when it closes its Syracuse-area facilities, have asked the U.S. Labor Department to provide trade adjustment assistance to their former employees.

Union officials at both companies said they will contact representatives in Washington early next week to check the status of the program and urges its renewal.

But for now, however, the federal government maintains that Congress failed to renew funding for the program, which last year received $51 million.

Lou Ann Burney, a spokeswoman for the Labor Department, said Friday the appropriations bill passed by Congress in mid-December contained language that renewed the training, job search and relocation assistance portion of the program. That, in essence, provides counseling for workers who have lost jobs because of import competition.

But, Burney said, the legislation did not renew the cash assistance part of the program. So as of Dec. 19, the Labor Department discontinued payments.

"If Congress chooses to make it retroactive or to reauthorize the program, then we'll start making payments again," she said.

Earlier this week, Boehlert and Rep. Donald Pease, D-Ohio, wrote a letter of protest to the Reagan administration. The congressmen contended that the legislation enacted clearly continued the trade adjustment assistance payments, and that "what is lacking is the executive will to continue the payments, not legal authority or funding."

"Given the many trade problems besetting America, now is hardly the time to cripple the only federal program specifically designed to help those workers who are losing their jobs to an ongoing flood of imports," Pease and Boehlert said.

The issue is likely to develop into a full-scale battle between the Reagan administration and congressional advocates of the benefits.

The program, which was enacted in 1962 and expanded in 1976, has been favored by congressmen in industrial states where firms have been hit hard by foreign imports and forced to lay off workers.

The Reagan administration has attempted several times to scuttle the program, arguing that it has failed to place a substantial number of unemployed workers in new jobs.

DANVILLE AREA COMMUNITY COLLEGE,
January 13, 1986.

Senator WILLIAM ROTH,
Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR ROTH: Please let me introduce myself. I am Donald F. Haberkorn, Coordinator of Admissions and Records at Danville Area Community College in Danville, Illinois.

Danville Illinois is a city in East Central Illinois whose principle employers have been of a heavy industrial nature. It is an area which in recent years has been plagued with high unemployment. It is an area whose unemployment rate is still lingering around 14 percent. It is an area whose workers have lost their jobs due to foreign imports and who have greatly benefited from the Trade Adjustment Act.

It is with this in mind that I write with regard to a large number of students who have been attending Danville Area Community College and receiving benefits. Their record is unbelievable. Of the 49 students six made the President's List (straight "A" grades), 13 made the Dean's List (no grade less than a "B"), 12 had a "B" average, but did have a grade less than "B", and only four had a grade average less than "C".

When these students complete their program, they will definitely be employable, because it is students of this caliber that employers are seeking to employ.

I am afraid, however, that many of these students will be denied the chance to complete their programs and enter the job market. Unless congress extends the weekly pay allotments for these eligible students and makes these payments retroactive to December 21, 1985, the majority will have little recourse except to drop out of their training programs.

Granted the education benefits were extended, but unless these participants have subsistance money to support themselves and their families, there is little to be gained from having funds to pay tuition, fees and book costs.

Therefore, I am asking you on the behalf of this very important group of students who are used to going to work, paying their bills and who for so many years were active participants in the American Dream of health, home, family, and the pursuit of happiness to please extend the Trade Adjustment Act Benefits and make them retroactive to December 21, 1985.

Sincerely,

DONALD F. HABERKORN,
Coordinator Admissions and Records.

DEAR SENATOR ROTH: I am calling on you concerning the recent legislation affecting the weekly benefits of the T.R.A. program.

Presently I attend Indiana Vocational Technical Institute located in Terre Haute, Indiana. Having completed my first quarter with a 3.81 grade average of possible 4.0 in Heating, Air Conditioning & Refrigeration.

Living in Danville, Illinois I must commute 140 miles each day to receive my education. Without the weekly benefits I cannot afford to feed my family of four and continue my education.

When I attended the T.R.A. seminar held in my community I felt that there was still a hope and a future for myself and my family. The only alternative I can see now is to sign up for Public Aid. I would much rather be an educated and productive tax paying citizen.

So please Senator Roth, hear my plea. Be my voice to your fellow constituents and help to reinstate the weekly T.R.A. benefits not only for myself but for the hundreds of T.R.A. recipients that are in the same financial and vocational distress.

Thank you for your concern and support.

Sincerely,

RON FULLER.

DEAR SENATOR ROTH: I am writing you with deep concern about the TRA program, in particular the weekly benefits, which as of December 21, 1985 have been suspended.

In August of 1985 I started attending Ivey Tech in Terra Haute, Indiana, to be retrained in the field of heating, air-conditioning, and refrigeration. So far I have completed one quarter of a one year program with a 4.0 average on a 4.0 scale. My fellow classmates that are in this program under TRA have also completed the first quarter with a 3.5 or better average.

This is a program that is working and giving us the opportunity to become working and productive citizens again. However, even with tuition, books, fees and etc., I see no way for me to finish my education without the weekly benefits. I must still find a way to support my family and pay my bills.

Without this weekly benefit I am forced to go look for a job in a field where there are none. For you see I am a factory worker of some twelve years. Due to foreign imports I found myself out of a job with little hope of finding another one.

I feel that I am fulfilling my part of the TRA agreement and ask only that the government do the same.

I am not asking for a handout just a chance to finish my education.

Sincerely yours,

DANIEL E. COLLINS.

JANUARY 10, 1986.

SENATOR ROTH: After 13 years of working at Hyster Company, Danville, Illinois, I found myself without a job due to foreign competition within the lift truck industry. My future was uncertain until I entered the TRA program, which I am confident will allow me to find a job once my training is complete.

I am currently enrolled at Eastern Illinois University at Charleston, Illinois, majoring in elementary Education. I chose education because of the anticipated need of additional qualified teachers that will be needed to fill classrooms as the number of children attending school increases.

Last semester I carried 15 semester hours and maintained a 3.67 average out of a 4.0 scale (4.0-A). This average was maintained even though I spent 3 hours per day on the road traveling round trip to school and back. I have also talked with others on TRA who are doing equally as well.

At the present time I am enrolled for 17 semester hours. I know that I can do well, but my biggest fear is that I may have to drop out of school, since my weekly benefit has been cancelled. I need this income to survive.

I feel that I am putting forth the effort to obtain these benefits, I am trying to obtain skills that will help me find employment.

Please do what you can to keep the TRA program in tact for those of us who are trying their best to retrain for available jobs. Anything that you can do to help us will be greatly appreciated.

Sincerely,

JOHN G. GROVE.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, for the workers of this country who recently lost their jobs to foreign competition, the Christmas just past was not merry; the new year not happy. Indeed, the season was an especially cold one for an estimated 10,000–15,000 workers nationwide—about 1,000 in New York alone—who had lost their jobs to foreign competition and until last month were receiving cash assistance under the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program.

On December 19, the Department of Labor ceased paying the extended unemployment benefits—trade readjustment allowances—available to workers under the TAA Program.

The result of the cutoff is clear. For those who had failed to find a job using their existing skills or had not completed training to learn new skills, and had exhausted their regular unemployment benefits, paying the rent and putting food on the table became a much more difficult proposition.

I might also note, Mr. President, that technical and financial assistance for firms that are trying to adapt and adjust to import competition, by improving their production processes or changing their line of work, also ceased on December 19. The Department of Commerce—International Trade Administration—notified the 13 regional trade adjustment assistance centers—the administrative vehicle for delivering aid—that no additional funds or technical assistance could be granted, no new applications accepted, and that phaseout plans must commence as of February 7, 1986.

The arguable basis for the two department's actions can be found, if one looks carefully, in the final days of the first session's legislative bog. In order that we might all have a clear understanding of the legislative situation, I wonder if I might briefly review developments during the first session.

As some of my colleagues know, the TAA Program was last reauthorized in 1983 through September 30, 1985. In anticipation of the need to reauthorize the program last year, on the first day of the 99th Congress I introduced with Senator HEINZ legislation to reauthorize and extend the existing TAA Program for 6 years. Thereafter, on July 31, 1985, we joined with Senators ROTH, CHAFEE, and SYMMS, six other members of the Finance Committee, and two others to introduce the Trade Adjustment Assistance Reform and Extension Act of 1985 (S. 1544).

S. 1544 would extend the TAA Program—in modified form—for 6 years, reform the program to emphasize worker retraining, and fund a revised TAA Program with a small fee on imports.

Our bill was unanimously adopted by the Finance Committee on September 20 as part of its budget reconciliation package, and appropriately so, since the program reforms set forth in the bill will result in immediate savings of about $7 million per year.

S. 1544 was part of the Senate's budget reconciliation bill, S. 1730, when it passed the Senate on November 14. A 4-year extension of the TAA Program—with some amendments—was similarly included in the House's budget reconciliation bill (H.R. 3128) during the Ways and Means Committee's markup on July 23 and 24 and when it passed the House on October 31.

During the conference on the reconciliation bill, the House conferees agreed—with some minor changes—to the Senate's provisions to reform and extend the TAA Program. The conferees agreed to a 6-year extension of the program beginning on the date of enactment.

Of course, as we all know, the conference report was not submitted and considered until December 19 and ultimately was not adopted by the Congress because of an unrelated dispute over the Superfund provisions. But what about TAA, which was set to expire on September 30. What happened in the interim?

Congress, recognizing the will of both Houses to have a TAA Program, extended the existing TAA Program four times between September 30 and December 19, while the budget reconciliation bill proceeded through the legislative process. For the record: H.R. 3452, Public Law 99-107, extended the program through November 14; H.R. 3721, Public Law 99-155, extended the program through December 14; H.R. 3918, Public Law 99-181, extended the program through December 18; and H.R. 3981, Public Law 99-189, extended the program through December 19.

Mr. President, it is unfortunate that in the rush to adjournment, Congress failed to explicitly reauthorize the TAA Program yet again. If memory serves, I believe the House sent a bill to the Senate on the 19th which extended TAA, along with three other programs—extending the cigarette tax, railroad retirement borrowing authority and Medicare hospital physician freeze—and numerous tax extender provisions, to March 15, 1986. The Senate passed that bill with an amendment striking some provisions other than TAA. The next day, the House passed an amended version of the bill without extending TAA—or the railroad retirement borrowing authority. Indeed, the final version of the bill included only the cigarette tax extension and the Medicare hospital physician freeze.

It is important to note that throughout this period, Congress has appropriated funds to continue the TAA Program—which some would argue obviated the need for reauthorizations.

Funding for the Department of Labor was included in the continuing resolution—House Joint Resolution 465, section 101(f)—adopted by the Congress on December 19. Funding was provided generally to the extent and in the manner provided for in the conference report on fiscal year 1986 Labor-HHS appropriations (H.R. 3424) was adopted by the House on December 5. However, an examination of that conference report shows that the appropriations committees had deferred their decisions on TAA funding waiting until they could see the final form of bill reauthorizing and extending the program.

Thus for worker cash benefits, the committees appropriated only a small portion—$5 million—of last year's appropriation. Of course, they understood that this would not create a problem for workers qualifying for such assistance, since such benefits are an entitlement and DOL would simply borrow money from its advances account—to be replenished by a later supplemental appropriations.

On the other hand, the appropriations conferees recognized that job search, retraining, and relocation expenses are not an entitlement and would have to be explicitly provided for in the continuing resolution if funds were to be available. Therefore, they included a separate provision—section 101(j)—providing appropriations for these activities at their current rate; that is, $26 million annually.

As for funding for the Department of Commerce, appropriations were provided for firm TAA in the House, Senate, and final fiscal 1986 appropriations bills for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and related agencies—H.R. 2965, Public Law 99-180; $192 million was provided for the international trade activities of the International Trade Administration, and the conference report makes clear that $18.5 million is for the TAA Program, including $14.5 million for grants to maintain the trade adjustment assistance centers—which provide the technical consulting assistance to firms trying to adjust to import competition—and $2 million for loans to firms.

Mr. President, given this history of TAA funding and authorization, the administration's refusal to spend appropriated funds, is of questionable validity. It certainly is of dubious merit as a matter of trade policy, especially in the face of continued record trade deficits.

But most importantly, while the Congress proceeds to complete consideration of the reconciliation bill—and with it the Roth-Moynihan bill to reform and extend the TAA Program—we need to restore benefits to the workers who are suffering.

Therefore, today Senator ROTH and I, joined by 20 of our colleagues, are introducing legislation to explicitly reauthorize the program through March 15, 1986. We understand that the House Ways and Means Committee will mark up similar legislation next week and that it may be considered by the full House. And we hope that as soon as such a bill is passed by the House, the Senate will act as quickly to pass such legislation.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator ROTH as a sponsor of this bill to extend the Trade Adjustment Assistance [TAA] Program, retroactively from December 19, 1985. This extension is necessary to keep the program going until this Congress completes action on the renewal of the TAA Program contained in our budget reconciliation measure, still in conference. Furthermore the extension is necessary to ease the plight of those unfortunate workers whose benefits were stopped midstream on December 19, 1985, because the Congress failed to complete action renewing the program.

I am also a cosponsor of the original proposal to restructure the TAA Program, which has already received the approval of House and Senate conferees on the budget reconciliation bill. This program fulfills a commitment to America's workers who are dislocated due to our open markets.

For the past 4 years America has been flooded with bargain imports and its traditional exports—machinery, chemicals, electronics, grain—have lost their price competitiveness. Industry after industry has come to the Congress seeking protection from imports. These industries, and their workers, assume that we have more to lose to open world trade than we have to benefit from it.

Open markets serve America in very tangible ways. Unfettered trade gives consumers access to a greater variety of products at lower prices. Trade forces domestic industries to adjust to changing technology before they become hopelessly inefficient. Perhaps most important, trade is the primary source of hope for the world's poor and indebted, increasing their stake in a stable world economic order.

Trade adjustment assistance is an essential aspect of this open system. We have all had our complaints in the past about the TAA Program in this country because of the way it has been organized and administered, but I believe we all recognize the stake that workers have in our efforts to dismantle trade barriers.

Some workers, laid off because of competing imports, have no reason to rejoice over cheap, high quality steel coming from Korea. Unemployed textile workers in Rhode Island, for example, hardly revel in the fact that American consumers are buying low cost high quality sweaters from Hong Kong in increasing numbers.

This Trade Adjustment Program can offset the sacrifice we impose on workers. Fortunately we have come up with a program which stresses adjustment through retraining and not simply assistance through cash payments. This extension keeps the existing program going until we can put this new program into place.

The revised program is consistent with our current efforts to trim Federal spending, in that the program would be funded through imposition of a very small fee on imports, which we want the GATT to endorse, permitting all GATT members to do the same. I feel very confident that our trading partners would also welcome the opportunity to put into place a good retraining program, creatively funded to reduce budgetary pressures.

Trade adjustment assistance programs provide an alternative policy to import restrictions as a temporary relief measure for workers. The cost of extending the program and the slight burden it places on imports are far less than the cost that consumers and the entire economy will suffer if we enact import protections for industries and workers which are suffering at the hands of foreign competition.

We cannot afford to abandon our commitment to an open and liberal international trading system, but neither can we ignore the plight of workers who are dislocated due to import competition. We certainly cannot ignore the difficulties being experienced by those currently in the program whose benefits were terminated December 19 solely because of the Congress' failure to renew the program.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, the Finance Committee has unanimously approved measures to strengthen the national effort to help workers who have lost their jobs due to foreign competition. The focus of those programs is to help cushion the shock of unemployment and retrain workers for new jobs in other industries. Both Houses of Congress supported this legislation as part of the 1986 reconciliation package. But because of continuing debate on unrelated parts of the bill, the congressional budget process has left dislocated workers who were already certified as eligible for the existing Trade Adjustment Assistance Program, without support. In some cases, dislocated workers had made retraining commitments and were relying on trade adjustment assistance readjustment allowances to make ends meet. Trade adjustment for firms is similarly frozen. In an economic environment that punishes our trade-sensitive sectors with an uncompetitive dollar and unfair foreign trade barriers, we must help workers who lose their jobs because of imports.

While I continue to support the reform proposals reported by the Finance Committee, and strongly support passing the reconciliation bill, with its reauthorization of trade adjustment assistance, I think it is crucial for us to extend the existing program so that current beneficiaries are not abandoned while Congress debates long-term changes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues today as an original cosponsor of the urgent legislative extension of the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program.

Because Congress failed to conclude action on last year's budget reconciliation measure, reauthorization of this program was not enacted. Authority for benefit payments therefore expired on September 30, 1985, and no payments have been issued since last year.

The reconciliation bill that extended this program last year made valuable reforms in the program, as well as providing for a financing mechanism to maintain the program in the future.

Those reforms are essential. I believe the considered judgment of the Senate Finance Committee and other interested parties last year resulted in a reform proposal that merits enactment in a substantially similar form. Because this administration opposes extension of the program, a full scale extension will involve a lengthy debate.

But an immediate emergency short-term extension is necessary now because the abrupt and unanticipated expiration of the program last year has left thousands of Americans all over the country with no source of income and total uncertainty about their future.

In Maine alone, 450 dislocated workers, people who have lost their jobs because of import competition, have received no benefits—no income—since December 20. Those of them who are now in training programs have stayed in training, in the hope that this Congress will act promptly to restore those benefits this year.

If Congress fails to act, these people will be forced to drop out of training, to seek alternative work if other jobs are available. Some of them will be forced to apply for public assistance. All of them have already suffered severe financial loss and the personal turmoil that is involved with job loss.

They are all dislocated workers whose problems are the direct result of conscious policy choices made by this administration in the area of trade.

Our trade imbalance imposes an unfair and crushing burden on those industries and workers whose products are targeted by foreign competition.

Although the long-range answer to their problem will require a dramatic change in the operation of our Nation's trade policy and improved investment and competitiveness on the part of every manufacturing sector, the immediate short-term problem must be addressed.

That short-term problem is very serious for the thousands of workers who have seen long-established shoe manufacturing plants closed with no hope of their reopening. It is serious for textile workers who have seen their intensive efforts to modernize overtaken by the combined effects of an overvalued dollar and foreign government subsidies to their overseas competitors.

The problem facing these manufacturers and workers are not of their own making. They are problems which have a variety of causes, including conscious Government policy choices. The policy of this administration, to favor imports as a way of restraining domestic inflation, has kept some prices lower for all at great personal cost to a few.

The Trade Adjustment Assistance Program is a small effort on the part of Government to redress the unfairness with which trade deficits affect different parts of the country. The program provides direct income help for those with no other income source; it creates the conditions that allow some to seek training for a new job field.

The Trade Adjustment Assistance Program is not the only answer to the changing makeup of our manufacturing sector. It is not a sufficient answer. But at the present moment, it is the only program in place which has the capacity to provide some level of assistance to those most directly and most drastically affected by our trade deficit.

For that reason, we cannot permit the lack of congressional action to terminate the program in this manner. An extension will permit the program to continue at its current level, and will give Congress the time it needs to address reforms and an orderly reauthorization of trade adjustment aid.

As I indicated, the steps taken last year are a basis for such long-term reforms. They include eligibility for the workers of impacted supplier industries; a requirement for retraining as a condition of receiving cash benefits; a program of training vouchers for workers in lieu of cash benefits; reimbursement of job search costs; and, most importantly, a self-financing mechanism through a minimal ad valorem import duty which would pay for the costs of this program.

Trade adjustment assistance can never take the place of an improved and aggressive U.S. trade policy. It cannot take the place of an improved international monetary policy to moderate wild imbalances in international currency rates.

But so long as governments insist on manipulating their export industries for competitive advantage, some form of trade adjustment aid will be necessary.

A long-term reform of our overall Trade Adjustment Program is essential. But a prerequisite to proper reform at this time is an immediate extension of the existing program authority.

Mr. BOREN. Mr. President, I am joining with several of my Senate colleagues today in introducing legislation to reauthorize workers' cash benefits under the Federal Trade Adjustment Assistance Program. This legislation is needed because the Department of Labor has taken the position that the catchall funding bill passed by Congress prior to adjournment in December did not contain the necessary language to authorize continued payments of cash benefits.

Although the Labor Department is continuing to fund other parts of the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program, including employment services, job search and job retraining, the Cash Assistance Program has been suspended. Under the Cash Assistance Program, after regular State unemployment benefits are exhausted, eligible workers are entitled to equivalent cash trade adjustment assistance benefits that pick up unemployment benefits for the balance of 52 weeks.

Although many of us disagree with the Department of Labor ruling in this matter, we nevertheless realize that time is of the essence in reauthorizing this important Trade Adjustment Assistance Program.

Mr. President, the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program was created some 25 years ago to assist workers who, through no fault of their own, are thrown out of work because of import competition. All across this Nation, there are growing lists of businesses which are simply unable to compete with the influx of foreign goods into the United States. In my own State, a B.F. Goodrich tire plant located in Miami, OK, will be forced to close next month due to the impact of foreign-made products. Some 1,900 employees will be left without jobs as a result.

We must not only take actions providing temporary assistance to our U.S. workers who are the victims of such foreign competition. In addition, Congress must take the lead in addressing the underlying problems that are fueling our mushrooming international trade deficit. I am continuing to work with others in the Senate who feel, as I do, that the time for action has come. In the coming weeks we will be introducing additional legislation aimed at solving these problems.

I am proud to join with my colleagues in offering this trade adjustment assistance legislation today. I urge the Senate to act swiftly in approving it.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I rise to join my colleagues today in introducing legislation to temporarily extend the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program for workers and companies adversely affected by import competition. This important program which provides funding for worker retraining and company restructuring through the Departments of Labor and Commerce was inadvertently allowed to expire on December 19. Since then, many thousands of workers and companies across the country actively involved in retraining and restructuring programs have been forced to call an abrupt halt to the needed efforts. Immediate enactment of this legislation is necessary to prevent further hardship for these individuals and companies which are desperately trying to adjust to import competition.

Since 1962, the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program has provided the means by which American companies and their workers can make the frequently difficult transition to the new competitive realities of the world marketplace. The value of this program has long been recognized. Even during periods when the United States has enjoyed a positive trade balance, certain sectors of our economy have required a measure of Federal assistance to regain their competitive position. The need for this program becomes especially critical during times like the present when scores of U.S. industries and their workers are feeling the devastating pressures of import penetration.

In my own State of Maine the footwear, textile, and paper industries have been particularly hard hit by recent surges in imports. Currently, some 450 displaced workers are actively involved in the TAA Program administered by the Labor Department. An additional eight companies are pursuing major restructuring efforts with the help and guidance of the Commerce Department. Unless this program is reauthorized immediately, we may lose all eight companies which have shown the potential to once again become major employers in the State.

The legislation we are introducing today simply extends the expired provisions of the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program until such time as permanent structural refinements can be made. We have an obligation to immediately replace the rug we inadvertently pulled out from under these companies and workers the week before Christmas. I strongly urge my colleagues to support this important measure.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join as a cosponsor of a temporary extension of the Trade Adjustment Assistance Program or TAA.

The authorization for this program expired September 30, 1985, and a reauthorization, with some changes, has been included in the omnibus reconciliation bill, portions of which are still being negotiated between the House and Senate.

As the Congress attempts to deal with the details of this legislation, there are many people in this country who are suffering at the hands of the administration, because it has chosen to withhold the trade readjustment allowances or TRA, from individuals who have already qualified for these benefits.

TRA is the equivalent of an additional 26 weeks of unemployment benefits for workers who have lost their jobs due to imports. There are requirements to meet in order to receive these benefits, principally that a person must continue to seek employment.

Many of the individuals receiving TRA are enrolled in some form of job training assistance. The administration has continued to provide the training portion of the program to current registrants, even though the authorization for this benefit also expired on September 30. It has gone on record, however, opposing the continuation of TRA, and prefers to see it become exclusively a training program as part of the Dislocated Worker Program under the Job Training Partnership Act.

Abruptly, and without notice, the TRA benefits were stopped on December 21, 1985. I have received a great deal of mail and many telephone calls from affected workers. Many are from the Danville, IL, area. The Hyster Co. employees were taking advantage of this program, and are now without the ability to support themselves while they try to find a new way to earn a living.

One case, I think, exemplifies the importance of continuing this program, and the problems that are being created by the failure of the administration to carry out the intent of Congress in paying TRA.

Harry Cooley worked at the Hyster Co. as a welder for 13 years. He is married, and has two children. He lost his job in March 1985, and collected regular unemployment benefits for 26 weeks. He then was certified for the TRA. He collected $209 per week through TRA until December 21. Mr. Cooley is attending college, taking 16 credit hours toward an associate arts degree in computer programming. He is working part time, earning $80 a week. His wife also works part time, earning $90 per week. They were just getting by when the $209 a week stopped coming. He is an "A" student, and expects to earn his degree in May 1987. The TRA benefits should have continued through March 1987, and with some savings and careful management, he could have made it.

Now, he's not so sure. The family was getting by on $1,500 a month, and suddenly, they have $680 to spend instead. The Cooley family is luckier than most. They were able to sell their home, and there is a small nest egg from that sale. Others have not been so fortunate. In industrial towns all over Illinois, there are several homes on every block with for sale signs posted and no buyers for them. There are also no jobs for these people. They're stuck in communities which offer little hope for new jobs. The Trade Adjustment Assistance Program provides relocation allowances for workers who want to try to find work in another area.

Mr. Cooley also tried that. He went to South Carolina, registered with the local Job Service office and had some interviews. However, he found that since he did not have a permanent residence there, he wasn't considered for employment. So, he returned to Illinois. He also went to Texas and encountered a similar reaction. It would seem that relocation is not all it is cracked up to be in reality. He had some skills, but wasn't considered because he was coming from another area.

There are thousands of other stories like this one across our country.

The bill we are introducing today will retroactively restore the TRA benefits which were cut off December 21, and continue them through March 15, 1986, so that we have an opportunity to address a permanent extension of the program which is included in the reconciliation bill.

It is vitally important that we continue this program for all the workers in Illinois and across the country who were made a promise and have seen that promise broken.

In closing, I would again like to share some of Harry Cooley's thoughts on this program and the hope it has brought to him and many others like him. He said, and I quote:

After all, it—(TAA)—is like our last chance, and we take it seriously because it is. I am working harder, and putting in more hours working part time, going to school and studying than I did when I was working as a welder. I have two boys and a wife to care for and this program is giving me that opportunity to do that.

Trade adjustment assistance is the only hope we can offer many workers like Harry Cooley, who have lost their jobs due to imports. The administration has continually turned its back on these people in industries which have taken a tremendous beating. Illinois is home to nearly all of the affected manufacturers—steel, footwear, textiles, electronics, construction equipment, bicycles, and oil, to name a few. In my State alone there are many companies which have qualified for trade adjustment assistance. Firms such as the Hyster Co. in Danville, Fiat-Allis Corp. in Springfield, Texaco in Lawrenceville, Republic Steel, United States Steel, Schwinn, Allis-Chalmers, Zenith Electronics have all been certified eligible for TRA in the past few years. As of December 21, there were 966 workers eligible for the TRA benefits in Illinois and are no longer receiving them. The same is true all over the country. They need our help and they need it now.

I urge my colleagues to join us in rectifying this serious problem as soon as possible.

S.J. Res. 259. Joint resolution designating February 16, 1986, as "Lithuanian Independence Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LITHUANIAN INDEPENDENCE DAY

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, today I am introducing a joint resolution, along with my distinguished friend and colleague from Illinois, PAUL SIMON, which recognizes February 16, 1986, as the 68th anniversary of the declaration of Lithuanian independence.

I urge my colleagues not only to cosponsor this joint resolution, but to enter their supportive comments in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to commemorate this important event.

By Mr. COCHRAN:

S.J. Res. 260. Joint resolution designating the first Sunday of October as "National Stepparents Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL STEPPARENTS DAY

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, I would like to take a moment to commend a growing number of men and women who have taken on the challenge of trying to build healthy, rewarding family relationships with children to whom they are not biologically related. These are the stepmothers and stepfathers who become part of the more than 1,300 new stepfamilies that are formed each day in this country.

Today, I am introducing legislation to designate the first Sunday of October as "National Stepparents Day." This day will offer stepchildren the opportunity to freely honor their stepparents, while allowing them to maintain loyalty to their natural parents on the traditional Mother's and Father's Days.

More than 35 million adults in America are currently stepparents, and 1 in every 5 children under the age of 18 is a stepchild. It is estimated that in the near future the number of stepfamilies will be greater than the number of traditional families. It is my hope that on National Stepparents Day efforts will be made to alert and educate the general public about the uniqueness of stepfamily relationships, and that special recognition be given to those stepparents who have extended their roles in life to enhance the lives of others.

I hope the Senators will support this joint resolution.

I ask unanimous consent to print the joint resolution at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 260

Whereas stepfamilies and stepparents are the largest growing social phenomena in our country;

Whereas there are more than 1,000 new stepfamilies formed daily in the United States;

Whereas it is estimated that by 1990 the number of stepfamily and single parent households will be greater than the number of traditional families in America;

Whereas currently more than 35 million adults are stepparents and one in every five children under the age 18 is a stepchild;

Whereas it is appropriate to give national recognition to the unique role assumed by stepparents and to increase public awareness of the special needs and concerns experienced by these individuals;

Whereas setting aside a specified day to recognize stepparents creates a new tie between child and stepparent; and

Whereas designating a special day for stepparents would give public validation and affirmation to this special group of individuals by focusing on the love, time, and personal commitment that stepparents unselfishly give to help raise, educate, and develop the children of other people: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled That the first Sunday in October is hereby declared "National Stepparents Day." The President is requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to celebrate that day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

S.J. Res. 261. Joint resolution to designate the week of April 14, 1986 through April 20, 1986, as "National Mathematics Awareness Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL MATHEMATICS AWARENESS WEEK

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and a number of colleagues, I am introducing a joint resolution to authorize the President to issue a proclamation designating the week of April 14-20, 1986, as "National Mathematics Awareness Week."

This resolution acknowledges the need to recognize the important part that basic mathematics research plays in maintaining the excellence of U.S. technology. Mathematics is a discipline which touches all of our lives. Medicine, social science, and the arts make use of mathematics as well as more obvious disciplines such as computer science and space science. Mathematical techniques for accumulating and projecting numerical data have changed the way in which we conduct business, elect our national leaders, and evaluate our national debt. Three examples will serve to show how mathematics contributes to U.S. technological leadership in the world economy.

Scientists at the Los Alamos National Laboratories in New Mexico have developed a new computerized method to predict the flow of air, fluids, and particles. This breakthrough in flow dynamics will allow extremely complex problems in aerodynamics to be solved on relatively small computers. These results which have implications for auto design, aircraft design, and spacecraft design are basically a new way of solving a system of partial differential equations. These equations are an important area of basic mathematics research.

Much has been made recently about the competitiveness of the Japanese and their effective management style. One component of that style is the introduction of statistical techniques for the control and quality testing of manufactured products. These techniques are beginning to find wider application in U.S. manufacturing, thereby increasing the competitiveness of U.S. business.

One of the interesting aspects of basic mathematics research is its spin-off or technology transfer potential. What begins as simply an interesting problem for a mathematician may have wide application in a variety of areas. Currently a new mathematical area called fractal geometry is being used to describe cellular growth, crystal formation, and to create alien landscapes in some of our current box office movie hits.

In spite of this, enrollment in mathematics programs at all levels is declining, there is a shortage of competent instructors, and only 55 percent of Ph.D. graduates in mathematics from American institutions last year were American citizens. In its review of U.S. mathematics, the National Research Council expressed concern that if this trend is not reversed basic research necessary to support U.S. technology and to introduce new technologies to the U.S. economy will not be done.

"National Mathematics Awareness Week" gives us an opportunity to focus on the contributions that mathematics and American mathematicians have made to our society, economy, and innovative technologies. While space and computer science have exotic hardware to attract recognition to their fields, basic mathematics research does not. However without the proper mathematics these other sciences could not have developed. Those of us who are sponsoring this legislation hope that by drawing national attention to the critical and exciting area of mathematics research, we will stimulate continued growth and innovation in this field.●

SENATE RESOLUTION 303—RELATING TO TAXATION OF EMPLOYEE BENEFITS

Mr. HEINZ (for himself, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. DIXON, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. STAFFORD, and Mr. ANDREWS) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. RES. 303

Whereas beginning a century ago in imperial Germany, and universally since World War II, the industrial nations of the world have looked upon health care, education, retirement security, and life disability, and unemployment insurance as fundamental necessities of a stable, progressive society;

Whereas unlike many other industrialized nations which have perceived that the national interest requires constantly rising minimum standards in these areas and have chosen to create government programs financed through general revenues, the United States chose to try to meet these needs indirectly through the tax code;

Whereas today more than one hundred and forty million Americans, including more than 90 per centum of full-time workers, are covered by an employer health plan and millions of Americans are also covered by other employee benefit programs such as life insurance, dental plans, child care, educational assistance, unemployment and worker compensation, and prepaid legal assistance;

Whereas a recent national survey of corporate managers illustrates that if a new tax on employee benefits were levied most employers would seek to reduce the level and availability of employee benefits, resulting in fewer protections and added coinsurance costs; and

Whereas this new tax on employee benefits, particularly on health insurance benefits, would discriminate against and penalize Americans with large families, the working aged, handicapped, and chronically ill whose health insurance premiums are more costly than those for younger, single, healthier workers; and

Whereas this new tax on employee benefits, would discriminate against and penalize employees who live in high-medical-cost areas, where health insurance premiums are more costly, and employees in hazardous, high-risk occupations who usually pay higher health insurance premiums: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that employee benefits not be taxed.

● Mr. HEINZ. Mr. President, our Nation's tax policies have for decades encouraged employer-provided benefits which are without parallel in the world. Through the Tax Code, the private sector has been able to provide a broad array of employee benefits, health care, education, retirement security, life, disability, and unemployment insurance. This unique system means that private industry helps contain costs which the Federal Government would otherwise pick up.

Proposals to end the Tax Code's special status for employer-provided fringe benefits come as a shock. My colleagues should be advised that we have not seen the end of this issue, and the upcoming Finance Committee markup will present several opportunities for proponents of a tax on employer-provided fringe benefits. Those who would have tax reform include a cap of $175 per month on tax-free health benefits for family plans and $70 per month for individuals will devastate retirees, the unemployed, the handicapped, the working aged, and surviving spouses and dependents who have little income with which to pay the additional tax. Taxation of health benefits will also penalize those with the costliest health premiums, including the chronically ill, the handicapped, and families with children. The effect on older workers could well prove disastrous. The Federal Government's role in providing health benefits to such workers will be increased, as needy citizens who now rely upon their health benefits are forced to turn to the Federal Government for assistance.

The former Secretary of Health and Human Services, Richard Schweiker, recently said that changing the present tax status of health insurance benefits "could cause the entire health insurance system to unravel, leading to higher costs for Medicare and Medicaid."

In addition, the conclusions raised at the conference of the Senate Finance Committee, held at Berkeley Springs over this past weekend, add to the uncertainty. The sense of the committee's members was that the House-passed bill, because of serious capital formation flaws, should not be the vehicle for Senate markup. Although the House wisely rejected any taxation of these vital health benefits, the Finance Committee's decision to start with an as yet unwritten committee print opens the door to the taxation of employee benefits.

Mr. President, I believe taxation of employee benefits is ill-advised and counterproductive. I am submitting a resolution declaring the sense of the Senate that employee benefits not be taxed. I am pleased to be joined in this effort by my distinguished colleagues. Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. DIXON, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. STAFFORD, and Mr. ANDREWS.

I also wish to commend the efforts of the distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Mr. PACKWOOD, to prevent the taxation of employee fringe benefits. I am looking forward to working with him to produce an equitable tax reform bill.

Mr. President, I urge all my colleagues to join me in sponsoring this effort to protect the benefits of working men and women.●

● Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, as an original sponsor of the Heinz-Moynihan-Specter resolution on the taxation of employee fringe benefits, I rise in strong support of this measure.

Benjamin Franklin once was heard to remark, "Nothing in life is certain except death and taxes." While I agree with this distinguished Philadelphian, I also believe that nothing is more uncertain than when death or injury will occur and how to tax fairly, simply, and efficiently. In order to counter the risks of life, many Americans protect themselves with health and life insurance, and retirement plans. And, in order to achieve a fair, simple, and efficient Tax Code, Americans need tax reform.

In late May, President Reagan submitted a bold plan for tax reform to Congress. Although I believe that Americans want reform, the administration's plan raised many issues for debate. President Reagan must be commended for keeping his vital initiative alive.

The administration proposed including employer contributions to health plans in a worker's income up to $10 per month—$120 per year—for individual coverage and up to $25 per month—$300 per year—for family coverage. By taxing as income the value derived from company-sponsored health insurance policies, the cost of maintaining adequate coverage could have risen beyond the reach of most Americans.

I have consistently opposed attempts to tax fringe benefits and believe that this resolution sends a strong signal to the Finance Committee and to Members in both Chambers that we must maintain the current tax treatment of these benefits. At a time when working families in Pennsylvania and across the Nation are under severe financial pressure, we simply cannot justify adding to their burdens by any changes in the tax status of these benefits.

Company-sponsored benefits provide a decentralized, and effective means of keeping employees healthy, encouraging savings, and providing income in the event of disability, death, or retirement. According to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, 82 percent of full-time workers in medium and large firms have employer-provided pension protection. In addition, the same survey indicates that 96 percent of full-time workers have employer-provided life and health insurance protection.

While I am pleased to note that the House bill has retained the current tax-exempt status of most employee benefits, I am concerned over changes which would adversely affect retirement savings.

The House bill would limit the use of 410(k) and individual retirement account [IRA] plans. The committee has recommended reducing from $30,000 to $7,000 the limit on employee contributions to 401(k) retirement plans. Unlike current law, these contributions would count against an individual's $2,000 IRA deduction limit. In addition, a 15-percent penalty tax would be assessed on those who withdraw funds before the age of 59½.

As budget deficits grow larger, and available capital pools dwindle, it is important to retain incentives for increased savings. High personal savings fosters lower interest rates, and thus are a principal catalyst to productive investment in this country. Section 401(k) and IRA plans have encouraged many rank-and-file employees to save money on a long-term basis, and it is difficult to justify changes that would limit use of these plans.

Maintaining a viable system of decentralized health and life insurance and other employee benefits is vital for Pennsylvania and for the Nation as a whole. As tax reform works its way through the Senate, I intend to oppose any changes which would limit the ability of employers to provide important medical and retirement services to their employees and their families.●

● Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues in submitting what I believe to be a fundamentally important resolution today, expressing the sense of the Senate that we should maintain our present policy of not taxing employee benefits.

There are many reasons why these benefits should not be taxed. Some of them are obvious, others are less so. There would be some very far-reaching and negative consequences of a reversal of our policy on this critical issue.

Almost every country in the industrialized world provides some form of protection for their citizens for health care, education, retirement security, and unemployment. Many are financed directly by these governments from general revenues. The United States has followed a different path, choosing instead to address these needs through our tax policy by giving deductions to employers for their contributions to employee benefit plans. Workers are not taxed for these benefits and they never have been.

Taxation of these benefits would destroy private-sector incentive and would ultimately lead to the erosion of employee compensation and benefit packages that currently exist. We all remember the devastating effect of the crippling unemployment rates in this country a few years ago. One of the related tragedies of those lost jobs was the loss of employment-related health insurance. Millions of people were suddenly faced with no protection whatsoever. This led to increased Federal costs in instances where these former workers were forced to depend on Medicaid instead of private insurance. Many were totally without protection and were denied health care altogether.

A recent Roper survey indicated that most employers would move to reduce health benefits if they were to lose the tax deduction for their contributions. This would mean that young, single, and healthy individuals would no longer be included in the insurance pool creating a situation which would lead to even higher health care costs than we now face.

Similarly, by taxing pension and retirement plans, we would jeopardize the ability of workers and their employers to provide retirement security, leading to more poverty among retirees and more dependence on the public sector as our work force grows older. The present administration has stressed the privatization of many benefits and services previously provided by the Government. By taxing employee benefits, we would be making those protections which are being provided by the private sector less economically feasible.

The thought of further taxation of unemployment compensation is not, in this Senator's opinion, something that we can do in a just society. Unemployment benefits now reach only one worker in four, the lowest in the program's history. These benefits have deteriorated, not only in the number of people who can receive them, but in the number of weeks available, from an all-time high of 65 weeks in 1975, to 26 weeks in most States today. When many States still have unacceptably high unemployment rates, and no longer count many people who are still out of work or are underemployed, placing an additional burden on those few who do receive some assistance would be unconscionable.

Taxing benefits of workers who are injured on the job and who receive compensation for those injuries, many of which are permanent impairments, is neither responsible nor humane.

Although I recognize that some would find the taxes on employee benefits a source of additional revenue, in my opinion and that of many others, it would be penny wise and pound foolish, leading to more drastic budget ramifications.

More importantly, it would be one more swipe at the workers of this country who are the backbone of our economy. These people are self-sufficient, and they want to stay that way. In an era when the Federal Government has slammed the door on many previously provided services and protections, taxing employee benefits would be the final straw.

As the Senate begins its deliberations on a new tax bill, it is my hope that we will see the wisdom of avoiding what may appear to be an easy source of revenue. It would be economically irresponsible and morally reprehensible.

I urge my colleagues to join us in cosponsoring this resolution so that it will serve as a guidepost as we begin consideration of the tax bill.●

SENATE RESOLUTION 304—RELATING TO TAXATION OF RETIREMENT BENEFITS

Mr. TRIBLE (for himself, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. MATHIAS, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. HOLLINGS, and Mr. SARBANES) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. RES. 304

Whereas retention and recruitment of qualified personnel is essential to the efficient operation of Federal, State, and local governments in meeting the vital needs of United States citizens as well as national and international obligations;

Whereas retention of qualified government personnel, such as scientists, engineers, technicians, senior managers, physicians, and educators is now threatened by a provision of the Tax Reform Act of 1985 (H.R. 3838);

Whereas any disproportionate burden placed upon public sector employees through a tax reform measure is an inequity which will create a powerful incentive for retirement and which will precipitate large-scale loss of government employees currently filling key positions;

Whereas this massive exodus from government service could result in unanticipated government expenses due to additional retirement benefits payments, compounded by continued payment of salaries for those vacant positions which are filled, thereby offsetting a large part of the tax revenues predicted to be received from repealing the 3-year basis recovery rule; and

Whereas the Senate intends and has stated its intention, in S. Res. 281, to "prepare legislation which will maximize fairness and long-term economic growth and minimize short-term economic disruption": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that section 1122(c)(1) of H.R. 3838 repealing section 72(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 pertaining to the 3-year basis recovery rule on taxation of retirement annuities will be deleted from the tax reform legislation now pending before the Senate Finance Committee, and that the present 3-year basis recovery rules will be maintained.

Mr. TRIBLE. Mr. President, as the Senate begins deliberations on the House-passed tax reform bill, I urge my colleagues to join with me to ensure that the Senate version of the tax bill does not contain an ill-conceived provision included in the House bill which eliminates the 3-year basis recovery rule for contributory defined benefit pension plans. To that end I am submitting a resolution which expresses the Senate's opposition to this proposal.

Approximately 19 million Americans—primarily Federal, State, and local employees—contribute to their retirement plans. These employees pay taxes on the moneys which they put into their annuity fund. Under current law, when the employee retires and begins to receive an annuity, these payments are not taxed until that individual has received an amount equal to his own contributions to the retirement fund.

The House tax reform bill proposed a drastic change in this established rule. Section 1122(c) of H.R. 3838 would eliminate the current procedures and subject retirees to immediate taxation of retirement benefits. This provision would have disastrous effects on those 19 million Americans now contributing to their retirement plans. And, this provision would have equally unproductive effects on the administration of Government at all levels, the service provided by Government, and the cost of Government.

The financial losses imposed upon employees would be severe and this onerous burden would compound year after year after year. The House provision seriously jeopardizes retirement income security for Federal employees and postal workers, for State and local employees, for teachers and firemen and policemen, for every American in public or private employment who pays into his retirement fund.

Although the House provision has not been enacted, its effects are already being felt. Across the Nation employees who are eligible to retire are beginning to leave their jobs or are making plans to do so in order to avoid the financial hardships which would be imposed upon them should Congress enact this tax penalty.

In the Federal Government, 210,000 employees are currently eligible to retire. An estimated 75 to 90 percent of those eligible to retire will do so prior to the effective date of the tax reform provisions.

Who are these employees eligible to retire? Fifty percent of the senior executive service, the highest level of employees in Government service, are eligible to retire. Over 40 percent of NASA's scientists and engineers are now eligible to retire. The Federal Government already has a severe recruitment and retention problem for these positions and others, such as nurses, physicians, air traffic controllers, and technicians. We cannot afford to lose these skilled and experienced personnel to early retirement.

Moreover Mr. President, the costs associated with the premature retirements of Federal employees could easily surpass any revenue gained by a change in the tax law. It is estimated that the House tax provision would raise $6.3 to $8.3 billion over 5 years, or on average, $1.26 to $1.68 billion per year. However, current Government obligations are $2.5 billion in annual annuities for Federal employees eligible to retire. If the majority of retirement eligible Federal workers choose early retirement as they have indicated, the costs of providing them with annuities would cancel our revenues expected by the proposed tax change.

I urge my colleagues to take note that the $2.5 billion figure represents only those costs associated with retirements of Federal workers. Federal workers number only 2.7 of the 19 million affected by the House provisions. The $2.5 billion figure does not include costs which would be imposed on State and local governments and private employers affected by the tax change.

Mr. President, the deleterious effects of section 1122(c) of H.R. 3838 are already being felt. We are already seeing the beginning of a crisis in government at all levels. Section 1122(c) must be omitted from the Senate bill and the Senate must provide an immediate signal of its intent to do so. We must assist employers to retain personnel now making retirement plans who may be unduly influenced by the proposed tax penalty. We must allay the well-founded fears of employees.

The resolution I am submitting today will provide the much needed signal for the 19 million Americans affected by the proposed tax change. The resolution expresses the Senate's opposition to section 1122(c) of the House tax bill and its intent to omit those provisions from the Senate version of the tax reform plan.

I urge every Senator to join me by cosponsoring this resolution. We must avert the crisis now in the making.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

CONSOLIDATED RAIL CORPORATION SALE

METZENBAUM AMENDMENTS NOS. 1441 THROUGH 1554

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. METZENBAUM submitted 114 amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 638) to amend the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 to provide for the transfer of ownership of the Consolidated Rail Corporation to the private sector, and for other purchases; as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 1441

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is therefore declared to be the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to the private sector by directing and facilitating implementation of the Secretary's Plan for the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

AMENDMENT No. 1448

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

COMMON CARRIER STATUS OF CONRAIL AFTER SALE

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

SEC. 304. The Secretary shall, no later than January 31 of each year, submit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a report setting forth each certificate which Norfolk Southern Corporation and Conrail provided to the Secretary, during the preceding year, certifying compliance with the covenants contained in the Definitive Agreements.

AMENDMENT NO. 1449

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is therefore declared to be the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to the private sector by directing and facilitating implementation of the Secretary's Plan for the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

"(5) It shall not be a defense to an action brought under this section that Norfolk Southern Corporation knew, or should have known, of the falsity of the Representations or that there exists no carryover basis procedure as contemplated by the last sentence of the Representations.

"(6) For purposes of this section, tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation shall include the tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation and its affiliated group, within the meaning of section 1504 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.".

Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

AMENDMENT No. 1450

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is therefore declared to be the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to the private sector by directing and facilitating implementation of the Secretary's Plan for the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

AMENDMENT NO. 1458

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

AMENDMENT No. 1459

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

COMMON CARRIER STATUS OF CONRAIL AFTER SALE

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

SEC. 304. The Secretary shall, no later than January 31 of each year, submit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a report setting forth each certificate which Norfolk Southern Corporation and Conrail provided to the Secretary, during the preceding year, certifying compliance with the covenants contained in the Definitive Agreements.

AMENDMENT No. 1460

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is therefore declared to be the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to the private sector by directing and facilitating implementation of the Secretary's Plan for the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

AMENDMENT No. 1476

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

AMENDMENT NO. 1477

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is therefore declared to be the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to the private sector by directing and facilitating implementation of the Secretary's Plan for the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 4. (a) In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the term—

AMENDMENT NO. 1478

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

Such qualification shall relate only to the contributions, allocations, and withdrawals of shares provided for in the Secretary's Plan with respect to the plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan. Such contributions and allocations shall in no event be treated as having exceeded the maximum annual addition permitted under section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (but not for purposes of applying section 404(j) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) for purposes of calculating any limitation under section 415 with respect to contributions and allocations not described in the Secretary's Plan, including contributions and allocations to plans and related trusts of the Corporation and any affiliated corporation. The continued qualification of such plans with respect to all other contributions, allocations, and withdrawals shall be subject to all provisions of existing law, as amended from time to time. No inference shall be drawn from this paragraph as to whether an amount is a contribution deductible under section 404 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 rather than a non-deductible capital expenditure.

"(12) Except as provided in section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105), the issuance and sale or contribution of securities by Norfolk Southern Corporation to fulfill arrangements with the Corporation's employees in implementing the Secretary's Plan and the distribution of shares from the Corporation's employee stock ownership plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall not be subject to the registration and prospectus delivery requirements of the Securities Act of 1933, any approval requirement under subtitle IV of title 49, United States Code, or the laws of any State with respect to the issuance and sale of securities.".

COMMON CARRIER STATUS OF CONRAIL AFTER SALE

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

The Secretary shall, no later than January 31 of each year, submit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a report setting forth each certificate which Norfolk Southern Corporation and Conrail provided to the Secretary, during the preceding year, certifying compliance with the covenants contained in the Definitive Agreements.

AMENDMENT No. 1486

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

The continued qualification of such plans with respect to all other contributions, allocations, and withdrawals shall be subject to all provisions of existing law, as amended from time to time. COMMON CARRIER STATUS OF CONRAIL AFTER SALE

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

SEC. 304. The Secretary shall, no later than January 31 of each year, submit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a report setting forth each certificate which Norfolk Southern Corporation and Conrail provided to the Secretary, during the preceding year, certifying compliance with the covenants contained in the Definitive Agreements.

AMENDMENT No. 1487

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section

401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

AMENDMENT No. 1488

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

SEC. 3. It is therefore declared to be the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to the private sector by directing and facilitating implementation of the Secretary's Plan for the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

COMMON CARRIER STATUS OF CONRAIL AFTER SALE

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

The Secretary shall, no later than January 31 of each year, submit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a report setting forth each certificate which Norfolk Southern Corporation and Conrail provided to the Secretary, during the preceding year, certifying compliance with the covenants contained in the Definitive Agreements.

AMENDMENT NO. 1503

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and nal Revenue Code of 1954, notwithstanding (A) that such plans may not meet the requirements of section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or (B) that participants in such plans may be entitled to withdraw a portion of the shares allocated to their accounts prior to the expiration of the period generally imposed by the Internal Revenue Service for qualified plans. Such qualification shall relate only to the contributions, allocations, and withdrawals of shares provided for in the Secretary's Plan with respect to the plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan. Such contributions and allocations shall in no event be treated as having exceeded the maximum annual addition permitted under section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (but not for purposes of applying section 404(j) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) for purposes of calculating any limitation under section 415 with respect to contributions and allocations not described in the Secretary's Plan, including contributions and allocations to plans and related trusts of the Corporation and any affiliated corporation. The continued qualification of such plans with respect to all other contributions, allocations, and withdrawals shall be subject to all provisions of existing law, as amended from time to time. No inference shall be drawn from this paragraph as to whether an amount is a contribution deductible under section 404 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 rather than a non-deductible capital expenditure.

"(12) Except as provided in section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105), the issuance and sale or contribution of securities by Norfolk Southern Corporation to fulfill arrangements with the Corporation's employees in implementing the Secretary's Plan and the distribution of shares from the Corporation's employee stock ownership plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall not be subject to the registration and prospectus delivery requirements of the Securities Act of 1933, any approval requirement under subtitle IV of title 49, United States Code, or the laws of any State with respect to the issuance and sale of securities.".

COMMON CARRIER STATUS OF CONRAIL AFTER SALE

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

AMENDMENT NO. 1504

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

COMMON CARRIER STATUS OF CONRAIL AFTER SALE

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

SEC. 304. The Secretary shall, no later than January 31 of each year, submit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a report setting forth each certificate which Norfolk Southern Corporation and Conrail provided to the Secretary, during the preceding year, certifying compliance with the covenants contained in the Definitive Agreements.

AMENDMENT NO. 1505

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is therefore declared to be the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to the private sector by directing and facilitating implementation of the Secretary's Plan for the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maxi-mizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

AMENDMENT NO. 1513

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

COMMON CARRIER STATUS OF CONRAIL AFTER SALE

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

AMENDMENT NO. 1522

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

The continued qualification of such plans with respect to all other contributions, allocations, and withdrawals shall be subject to all provisions of existing law, as amended from time to time. FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is therefore declared to be the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to the private sector by directing and facilitating implementation of the Secretary's Plan for the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.
